UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, } ss:

Be it remembered that in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at the city of Washington, in said District, at the times hereinafter mentioned, the following papers were filed and proceedings had in the above-entitled cause, to wit:

Declaration.

Filed October 16, 1900.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

JOHN D. BOERING and MEARLIN G. BOERING, His Wife, Plaintiffs,
vs.
CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY, Defendant. } At Law. No. 44219.

The plaintiffs sue the defendant, The Chesapeake Beach Railway Company, for that heretofore and before the happening of the grievances hereinafter mentioned the defendant was, and still is, a corporation operating a steam railway for the purpose of carrying passengers for hire from the District of Columbia to Chesapeake Beach, in the State of Maryland, and from the said Chesapeake Beach to the said District of Columbia, and that on or about the second day of September, 1900, at about 10 o'clock p. m., the female plaintiff herein, Mearlin G. Boering, was lawfully, as a passenger for hire, upon one of the trains operated by said defendant between Chesapeake Beach and the said District of Columbia, and which said train was approaching the depot of the said defendant
2 in or near the said District of Columbia, and that then and there it became the duty of the defendant, its servants and employees, so to operate and control its said train and its tracks, switches, and other appliances as to carry safely the said female complainant to her destination in the said District of Columbia, yet nevertheless, at or about the time aforesaid, the defendant, its servants and employees, so carelessly and negligently operated the said train and the said tracks, switches, and other appliances at or near its said depot, as aforesaid, that said train, while going at a fast rate of speed, to wit, about twelve miles an hour, left the main track and ran through an open switch into a siding near the said depot, upon which siding were other trains and cars, and that said train upon which the said female plaintiff was riding violently collided with the cars upon said siding, as aforesaid, whereby and by reason of which negligence and the said collision the plaintiff was thrown violently upon the floor of the car in which she was riding, and was then and there severally bruised, hurt, and injured, to wit, her shoulders, body, back, head, and limbs, and her nervous system was then and there shocked, disordered, and impaired, and her ovaries bruised and contused and she was otherwise internally and permanently injured, and she became and was rendered sick, sore, lame, and nervously disordered and has so remained for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, and the said female plaintiff has, during the time aforesaid, suffered great pain of body and mind and will continue to suffer great pain of body and mind, and she has been permanently injured in her bodily health and strength, to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $15,000. Wherefore, they bring this suit and claim the sum of $15,000 damages, besides costs.

And for a second and further cause of action the plaintiffs sue the defendant, The Chesapeake Beach Railway Company, for that heretofore and before the happening of the grievances hereinafter mentioned the defendant was and still is a corporation operating a steam railway for the purpose of carrying passengers for hire from the District of Columbia to Chesapeake Beach, in the State of Maryland, and from the said Chesapeake Beach to the said District of Columbia, and that on or about the second day of September, 1900, at about 10 o'clock p. m., the female plaintiff herein, Mearlin G. Boering, was lawfully a passenger at the invitation of the defendant on one of the trains operated by said defendant between Chesapeake Beach and the said District of Columbia, and which said train was approaching the depot of the said defendant in or near the said District of Columbia, and that then and there it became the duty of the defendants, its servants and employees, so to operate and control its said train and its tracks, switches, and other appliances as to carry safely the said female complainant to her destination in the said District of Columbia, yet nevertheless, at or about the time aforesaid, the defendant, its servants and employees, so grossly, carelessly, and negligently operated the said train and the said tracks, switches,

3 and other appliances at or near its said depot, as aforesaid, that the said train while going at a fast rate of speed, to wit, about twelve miles an hour, left the main track and ran through an open switch into a siding near the said depot, upon which siding were other trains and cars, and that said train upon which the said female plaintiff was riding violently collided with the cars upon said siding, as aforesaid, whereby and by reason of said gross negligence and said collision the plaintiff was thrown violently upon the floor of the car in which she was riding, and was then and there severely bruised, hurt, and injured, to wit, her shoulders, body, back, head, and limbs, and her nervous system was then and there shocked, disordered, and impaired and her ovaries bruised and contused, and she was otherwise internally and permanently injured, and she became and was rendered sick, sore, lame, and nervously disordered, and has so remained for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, and the said female plaintiff has during the time aforesaid suffered great pain of body and mind, and will continue to suffer great pain of body and mind, and she has been permanently injured in her bodily health and strength, to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $15,000. Wherefore they bring this suit and claim the sum of $15,000 damages, besides costs.

Filed November 7, 1900.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the — Day of November, A. D. 1900.

JOHN D. BOERING and MEARLIN G. BOERING, His Wife, Plaintiffs,
vs.
THE CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY. } At Law. No. 44219.

The defendant for plea to the first count of plaintiff's declaration filed herein says that upon the occasion referred to therein the female plaintiff, Mearlin G. Boering, was not a passenger for hire upon a train operated by the defendant, as alleged.

And for further plea to the second count of plaintiff's declaration defendant says that the female plaintiff, Mearlin G. Boering, upon the occasion referred to therein was not a passenger at the invitation of the defendant upon a train operated by the defendant, as alleged.

4 And for further plea to said second count of plaintiff's said declaration defendant says that it is not guilty, as alleged.

And for further plea to both counts of plaintiff's said declaration defendant says that at the time of the occurrences therein referred to the female plaintiff, Mearlin G. Boering, if she was upon a train of the defendant company at all, was riding thereon by virtue of the possession of a free pass, which pass was issued to and accepted by said female plaintiff as a mere gratuity and upon the condition, which was printed upon the back thereof, that the person accepting and using the same assumed all risks of accidents and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of defendant company's agents or otherwise.

Now come the plaintiffs, by their attorneys, Eugene Carusi & Sons, and move the court to strike out the further plea of the defendant to both counts of the plaintiff's declaration, on the ground that said plea is argumentative, hypothetical, alternative, uncertain, and does not give color.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the — Day of November, A. D. 1900.

JOHN D. BOERING and MEARLIN G. BOERING, His Wife,
vs.
THE CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY. } At Law. No. 44219.

The defendant, by leave of the court, withdraws the third plea heretofore filed by [illegible] to the first and second counts of the plaintiffs' declaration and in lieu thereof substitutes the following, to wit:

And for a further and third plea to said first count of plaintiffs' said declaration the defendant says that at the time of the occurrences therein referred to the female plaintiff, Mearlin G. Boering, was not "lawfully a passenger for hire," as in said count alleged, but was riding upon a passenger train of said defendant upon and by virtue of a free pass which had been issued and given to said female plaintiff and accepted by her as a mere gratuity, and without any consideration having been received from her therefor, and upon the following conditions and agreements plainly printed in legible type upon the back thereof, to wit:

"Not transferable.

"The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise.

"If presented by any other than the individual named therein, conductor will take up pass and collect fare."

And for a further and third plea to said second count of plaintiffs' said declaration the defendant says that at the time of the occurrence therein referred to the female plaintiff, Mearlin G. Boering, was not "lawfully a passenger at the invitation of the defendant," as in said second count alleged, but was riding upon a passenger train of said defendant upon and by virtue of a free pass which had been issued and given to said female plaintiff and accepted by her as a mere gratuity, and without any consideration having been received from her therefor, and upon the following conditions and agreements plainly printed in legible type upon the back thereof, to wit:

"Not transferable.

vs.
THE CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY. } At Law. No. 44219.

The plaintiffs say the defendant's amended plea to the first count of the plaintiffs' declaration is bad in substance.

EUGENE CARUSI & SONS,

Note that the matter of law intended to be argued is that a common carrier of passengers cannot exempt itself from liability to persons traveling on a free pass by any stipulation against its own negligence.

The plaintiffs say that the defendant's amended plea to the second count of the plaintiff's declaration is bad in substance.

8 JOHN D. BOERING and MARLIN G. Boering, Plaintiff-, vs.
CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY, Defendant.
No. 44219. At Law.

Now again come here the plaintiffs herein, by their attorneys, Messrs. Carusi & Sons and Merilatt, and tender to the court their bill of exceptions taken during the trial of this cause, and pray that it may be duly signed, sealed, and made part of the record, now for then, which is done accordingly.

Bill of Exceptions.

Filed April 7, 1902.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

JOHN D. BOERING and MEARLIN G. BOERING, Plaintiffs,
vs.
CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY.
At Law. No. 44219.

Be it remembered that the above-entitled cause came on for trial on the 17th day of February, A. D. 1902, before Mr. Justice Clabaugh and a jury, Messrs. Eugene Carusi and Sons and Charles H. Merillat appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs, and Messrs. F. D. McKenney and J. S. Flannery appearing on behalf of the defendant.

And thereupon the plaintiffs, to maintain the issues upon their part joined, gave evidence by the following witnesses, tending to prove as follows:

MEARLIN G. BOERING testified that she, her husband, and a friend, Mr. Burke, went to Chesapeake Beach on Sept. 2, 1900, on the cars of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company, and returned on said railway the evening of the same day. As the train came into Chesapeake junction there was a sudden collision, and she was thrown forward from her seat into the aisle, where she was trampled on by several other passengers and suffered severe injuries, from which injuries she still suffers.

JOHN D. BOERING testified in corroboration of his wife being in the accident and being injured. He was advertising solicitor and superintendent for Moxley bill-posting service.

Dr. WADE H. ATKINSON testified that he was called to attend Mrs. Boering about midnight after the accident. She was seriously injured.

Officer RICKETTS and Lieut. DALEY, of the police department, testified that the accident occurred just over the District line, at Chesapeake junction, and was due to a passenger train running into a train of empty coaches on an open switch.

9 MARTIN WALTERS and CHARLES DALEY, who were standing on the station platform waiting for the train to come in, gave evidence tending to prove that there were no lights on the switch or any switchman there at the time of the accident; that the switch was usually locked by the "captain" of the train that came in and used the switch, and that the switch was open when the passenger train came in.

W. A. RIORDAN, a former railroad employé for 18 years, testified that he was on the passenger train, and that immediately after the collision he made an examination, found the train had run into empty coaches on a siding; that the switch was open and that there were neither lights nor a switchman about the switch, and that it was usual and customary to have either a light or switchman at railroad yard sidings such as this one was.

Mrs. BOERING was recalled at the request of the defendants, who called upon plaintiffs' counsel to produce a pass in Mrs. Boering's name pursuant to notice given, and in response to further questions evidence was given by Mrs. Boering as follows:

Q. Where did you buy your ticket, if at all, that morning?
A. I didn't buy any ticket at all; Mr. Boering attended to my transportation.
Q. Did he buy a ticket for you that morning?
A. No.

Mr. MERILLAT: We object.
The COURT: I think that is a competent question.

By Mr. MCKENNEY:

Q. You were riding with Mr. Boering on the train?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where were you when the conductor came along for the tickets?
A. In the seat with Mr. Boering.
Q. Did you see your husband present anything to the conductor as representing your right to ride?
A. I saw him present them cards, and also another ticket.
Q. What was the other?
A. A bought ticket.
Q. For whom was that?
A. For Mr. Burke; I suppose it was for him.
Q. You saw your husband present two cards to the conductor that were not tickets?
A. I saw him give the transportation to the conductor.

Q. Had you ever seen those cards before?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was this one of the cards he gave to the conductor?
A. I don't know; but I know I saw them cards after the accident.
Q. Had you ever seen them before the accident?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did they look like this card?

Mr. CARUSI, JR.: We object to any further questions on this line.
The COURT: Remember that Mr. McKenney is cross-examining this witness. These are preliminary questions that do not go to the real merits of the case at all.

10 By Mr. MCKENNEY:

Q. You say that you were sitting in the seat with your husband when the conductor came along?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you notice Mr. Boering present two cards and a ticket?
A. Yes, sir; he bought a ticket.
Q. You say you do not know whether this is one of the cards or not?
A. Well, I seen him handle the cards. He had them entered in a book, and he reached up to the conductor like that (indicating). The conductor didn't take them in his hands.
Q. The conductor looked at them?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was this one of the cards he looked at?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. This card bears your name, does it not?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENNEY: Now, if your honor please, I offer this pass in evidence as the token by virtue of the production of which the plaintiff in the case was riding on that train at that time.
The COURT: Now the question arises.
Mr. CARUSI, JR.: Your honor, we object to the introduction of that pass in evidence. The pass, as you will observe, was made out to Mrs. J. D. Boering, but was not signed by her, nor is it stated by the witness, in reply to questions, that she ever saw it or read it and consequently that she ever saw or read what appears on the back of it. The condition on the back of the pass is one exempting the railroad company from any liability that may be sustained by the person travelling on its road with this card, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise. We say that it is absolutely immaterial to the right of the plaintiff to recover whether or not the plaintiff was riding upon a free pass, a free pass with stipulations on the back of it, or any kind of transportation; whether she paid her fare or was merely upon the train in any capacity other than as a trespasser, when another question might arise. We say also that no foundation has been laid here by showing that even if she had ridden on a pass she knew the conditions thereof and assented to them.

* * * * * * *

Plaintiffs' counsel noted an exception on the grounds stated heretofore by Mr. Carusi, of counsel.

The pass, which was then and there read in evidence to the jury, was as follows:

Front.

Chesapeake Beach railway. 1900.

Pass Mrs. J. D. Boering. Complimentary. Until December 31st, unless otherwise ordered.

Not good unless countersigned by—

A. H. LEWIS.

OTTO MEARS, President.

A. H. LEWIS.

No. C. 1539.

Not transferable.

The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise.

If presented by any other than the individual named thereon, the conductor will take up pass and collect fare.

J. D. BOERING thereupon was recalled to the stand by plaintiffs' counsel and gave evidence tending to prove that at the same time the pass for Mrs. Boering was given him there were given to witness four other passes, two being to Mr. Shoemaker, general manager of the Moxley advertising service, and Mrs. Shoemaker; one to Mr. Edwards, the Baltimore agent of the advertising service; and one to Mr. J. D. Boering, one of the parties named as plaintiff in this action, all being issued at the same time and pursuant to the same conversation with General Passenger Agent Lewis, of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company. Plaintiff thereupon offered in evidence the pass issued to J. D. Boering at the same time the pass issued in the name of Mrs. J. D. Boering was given to him.

Defense objected that it was res inter alios. The objection was overruled, and the pass then read in evidence. It was identical with the pass issued to Mrs. Boering, except that its number was 1538, that it read "Pass Mr. J. D. Boering," and that in place of the word "complimentary" were the words "Acc. adv. contract Moxley ad. service."

Further evidence was given by Mr. Boering as follows:

By Mr. CARUSI, JR.:

Q. Mr. Boering, when you and Mrs. Boering were in the car and the conductor came by for the pass, who gave the pass to the conductor?

A, I did.

Mr. McKENNEY: I object. Of what consequence is that?

Mr. CARUSI, JR.: It is simply a matter of inducement.

Q. What was it you gave the conductor? You say you paid the fare. How did you pay it?

A. I paid it—I don't know that I understand fully the sense of your question—how I paid it.

Q. You handed tickets to the conductor; what were the tickets?

A. Transportation for three people.

Q. Who procured that transportation?

A. I did.

Q. From whom did you procure it?

A. From Mr. Lewis, the passenger agent of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company.

Q. As to the transportation you handed to the conductor, what was the character of it?

A. Transportation for myself and wife, and one was a ticket I procured the evening of going to the beach.

Q. Did you ever show that transportation to the plaintiff in this case before the time when you and she were on the train together?

A. I did not. It was such a matter that I thought it was immaterial to her.

12 Q. Did you tell her that you had procured passes?

A. I told her I had procured transportation.

Q. Did you tell her under what circumstances?

A. In conjunction with the contract of advertising.

By Mr. McKENNEY:

Q. Had you and Mrs. Boering ever been to Chesapeake Beach before September 2?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. She had accompanied you down there during the preceding summer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you used this same transportation on those trips?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently had that happened?

A. I can't recall that.

Q. About how many times?

A. I don't know.

In answer to further questions, witness testified that he never had left the pass with his wife at any time, and that it always had been kept in his (witness') pocket.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. MERILLAT:

Q. Mr. Boering, did Mrs. Boering ever see the conditions on the back of this ticket prior to the time of the accident—the ticket that was made out in her name?

Mr. MCKENNEY: That seems to me to be immaterial. Your honor has already ruled upon that point.
The COURT: Do you object?
Mr. MCKENNEY: I object.
The COURT: The objection is sustained.
Mr. MERILLAT: Exception noted, your honor.

By Mr. MERILLAT:

Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever authorize you to procure a free pass for her over the Chesapeake Beach railroad?

Mr. MCKENNEY: That is also objected to.
The COURT: The objection is sustained.
Mr. MERILLAT: Exception noted, your honor.

By Mr. MERILLAT:

Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever assent to your waiving her right to a recovery from this company for negligence?

Mr. MCKENNEY: I object to the question because I do not understand it.

By Mr. MERILLAT:

Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever, in any way, assent to your procuring transportation for her over this railroad and relieving the company from any liability therefor on the grounds of negligence?

Mr. MCKENNEY: That is objected to.
13 The COURT: The objection is sustained.
Mr. MERILLAT: Exception noted, your honor.
The COURT: All of this, if it is material at all, ought to have been brought out on the examination-in-chief. This is re-examination.

Thereupon evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs tending to show that the pass upon which the female plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident had been issued to said plaintiff for value.

And thereupon, upon all the evidence hereinbefore set forth, which was all the evidence given by the respective parties, and which is hereby referred to and made part hereof, the plaintiff prayed the court to grant the following instructions, and the action of the court and of counsel upon each of said instructions so requested was as is hereinbelow set forth:

Plaintiff's Prayers.

1. If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff Mearlin G. Boering, while on the cars of the defendant, was injured by the negligence of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was riding on a ticket from which value had been given, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you are instructed that the defendant is not exonerated from liability in any degree from damages occasioned by such negligence by reason of any circumstances or conditions with reference to the defendant railway company's compensation for transportating the plaintiff.

Granted.

2. The jury are instructed that if they find that the plaintiff's husband, John D. Boering, and the defendant were in negotiation for advertising work, and that the defendant, because of the advertising work said John D. Boering was to do for defendant, agreed to and did give said John D. Boering separate passes for himself and his wife, and that Mearlin G. Boering was lawfully on the car of the defendant at the time of the accident, and never had seen nor knew, prior to the accident, of the contents of the pass or ticket which her husband showed to the conductor as entitling her to ride on defendant's road, then if you find that the defendant was negligent in the management of its road, and the plaintiff Mearlin G. Boering was injured in consequence of said negligence and without fault on her part, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you should disregard the conditions on the back of the pass produced in evidence.

Overruled.

Exception noted by plaintiff separately and severally then and there upon the minutes of the court.

3. That if the jury shall find from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant while plaintiff was lawfully upon a train of the defendant railroad company, they are to find for the plaintiff whether she was traveling upon a 14 free pass or not, or whether such pass had or not on the back thereof a stipulation against liability arising from negligence or otherwise.

Overruled.

Exception noted by plaintiff severally and separately then and there upon the minutes of the court.

4. If the jury shall find in favor of the plaintiff, then in estimating damages you are to take into consideration the nature and extent of the injuries to the plaintiff and the pain attending thereupon and naturally incident thereto; the character and extent of her physical disability and the shock to her nervous system and results thereof resulting from such injuries, and return a verdict for what in money would be a fair recompense for the injuries received and suffering undergone by the plaintiff.

Granted.

Thereupon the court having instructed the jury in accordance with prayers numbered one (1) and — (4) above and having refused to instruct them in accordance with prayers numbered two (2) and three (3), to which refusal the plaintiffs then and there excepted, and the jury, having retired to consider of their verdict, returned a verdict for defendant.

Be it further remembered that each of the separate and several exceptions taken by counsel for the plaintiff to the rulings of the court during the progress of said trial — each of the exceptions taken by counsel for plaintiff to the refusal of the court to grant each of the prayers of the plaintiff hereinbefore set forth were so taken by counsel for plaintiff then and there, before the jury retired, separately and severally, and said exceptions were then and there, separately and severally, duly noted upon the minutes of the justice presiding at the trial, and counsel for the plaintiff then and there prayed the court, and now prays the court to sign and seal this bill of exceptions, to have the same force and effect as if each of the said exceptions was separately and severally set forth in a separate bill of exceptions, and at the request of said counsel for the plaintiff the same is accordingly signed and sealed and made a part of the record in this cause, now for then, this seventh day of April, 1902.

17 JOHN D. BOERING and MEARLIN G. BOERING, His Wife, Appellants, vs.
CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY. } No. 1207.

Mr. Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the court.

This action was begun by John D. Boering and his wife, Mearlin G. Boering, to recover damages for injuries sustained by the latter whilst riding as a passenger upon the railway owned and operated by the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company.

The defense was that Mrs. Boering was carried free upon the express condition that she assumed the risk of accident caused by the negligence of the carrier's agents. The proof showed that Mr. and Mrs. Boering, accompanied by a friend, went to Chesapeake Beach on the morning of September 2, 1900, and returned on an evening train. As the train came into Chesapeake junction it collided with some empty coaches on a siding. The collision was due to the fact that the switch had been left open, and was neither lighted nor guarded. Mrs. Boering was thrown down and trampled upon by some of the passengers, receiving serious injuries. She and her husband were carried free upon separate passes which had been given to him some time before by the defendant. These were in the shape of small, yellow, ornamented cards. The face of that issued to her had the following in printed and written letters:

"Chesapeake Beach railway. 1900.

"Pass Mrs. J. D. Boering. Complimentary. Until December 31st, unless otherwise ordered.

"Not good unless countersigned by—

"A. H. LEWIS.

OTTO MEARS, President.

"A. H. LEWIS.

"No. C. 1539."

On the back the following condition was printed in small type:

"Not transferable.

"The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise,

18 "If presented by any other than the individual named thereon, the conductor will take up pass and collect fare."

Mrs. Boering, on cross-examination, testified that she knew her husband had the cards and that he purchased no tickets; that she had traveled on them several times during the summer in company with him; that she saw him show them to the conductor of the train on which she was injured; that she had not had either of them in her possession, and had not seen the condition assuming risk, etc.

Mr. Boering was called on behalf of the plaintiff, and testified that he was advertising solicitor and superintendent for "Moxley bill posting service." His testimony corroborated that of his wife and others respecting the accident. Afterwards he was recalled by the plaintiff, and, as recited in the bill, gave evidence tending to prove that at the same time the pass for Mrs. Boering was given him there were given to witness four other passes, two being to Mr. Shoemaker, general manager of the Moxley advertising service, and Mrs. Shoemaker; one to Mr. Edwards, the Baltimore agent of the advertising service, and one to Mr. J. D. Boering, one of the parties named as plaintiff in this action, all being issued at the same time and pursuant to the same conversation with General Passenger Agent Lewis, of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company.

He was then permitted to read his own pass which was similar to hers, save that it read "Pass Mr. J. D. Boering," and instead of "Complimentary," read—"Acc. adv. contract Moxley ad. service."

On cross-examination he said, that he had not shown the transportation to his wife because he thought it immaterial to her; that she had traveled with him upon this transportation, but he had never left her pass with her. On re-examination plaintiff propounded the following questions:

"Q. Mr. Boering, did Mrs. Boering ever see the conditions on the back of this ticket prior to the time of the accident—the ticket that was made out in her name?

"Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever authrorize you to procure a free pass for her over the Chesapeake Beach railroad?

"Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever assent to your waiving her right to a recovery from this company for negligence?

"Q. Did Mrs. Boering ever, in any way, assent to your procuring transportation for her over this railroad and relieving the company from any liability therefor on the grounds of negligence?"

Upon objections offered by the defendant, the witness was not permitted to answer the foregoing questions and plaintiff excepted.

At plaintiff's request the court gave instructions one and four as follows:

"1. If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff Mearling G. Boering, while on the cars of the defendant, was injured by the negligence of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was riding on a ticket for which value had been given, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you are instructed that the defendant is not exonerated from liability in any degree from damages occasioned by such negligence by reason of any circumstances or conditions with reference to the defendant railway company's compensation for transporting the plaintiff."

"4. If the jury shall find in favor of the plaintiff, then in [illegible]imating damages you are to take into consideration the nature and extent of the injuries to the plaintiff and the pain attending thereupon and naturally incident thereto; the character and extent of her physical disability and the shock to her nervous system and results thereof resulting from such injuries, and return a verdict for what in money would be a fair recompense for the injuries received and suffering undergone by the plaintiff."

The following, numbered two and three, were refused:

"2. The jury are instructed that if they find that the plaintiff 's husband, John D. Boering, and the defendant were in negotiation for advertising work, and that the defendant, because of the advertising work said John D. Boering was to do for defendant, agreed to and did give said John D. Boering separate passes for himself and his wife, and that Mearlin G. Boering was lawfully on the car of the defendant at the time of the accident, and never had seen nor knew, prior to the accident, of the contents of the pass or ticket which her husband showed to the conductor as entitling her to ride on defendant's road, then if you find that the defendant was negligent in the management of its road, and the plaintiff Mearlin G. Boering was injured in consequence of said negligence and without fault on her part, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you should disregard the conditions on the back of the pass produced in evidence."

"3. That if the jury shall find from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant while plaintiff was lawfully upon a train of the defendant railroad company, they are to find for the plaintiff whether she was traveling upon a free pass or not, or whether such pass had or not on the back thereof a stipulation against liability arising from negligence or otherwise."

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and from the judgment thereon the appeal has been taken.

The errors that have been assigned specifically show forth every point that has been argued, and without reciting them, the several questions which they present for determination will be considered in the natural order of their arrangement.

1. The court did not err in refusing the second instruction relating to a supposed negotiation between plaintiff's husband and the defendant concerning advertising work as including the pass delivered to him for her use, for the reason that there was no evidence sufficient to raise such an issue. For the same reason the first instruction that was given, to the effect that if they should find that "the plaintiff was riding on a ticket for which value had been given, then their verdict should be for the plaintiff," could ha e been denied. There was a third person in the plaintiff's party, who went upon Mr. Boering's invitation, and for him alone a ticket was purchased and paid for. Plaintiff and wife 19 were lawfully upon the train, but they rode upon passes for which no consideration was given. Boering himself was the only witness who testified to the receipt of the passes, and he fails to say that any arrangement between him and the defendant concerning advertising embraced the issue of free transportation to his wife. His own pass recites that it is on account of advertising contract with Moxley advertising service. This might mean that it was part of the consideration of that contract, or merely a courtesy extended because of their relations. However this may be is a matter of no importance because the injury sued for was not to him but his wife, whose pass recites that it was "Complimentary."

Testimony was clearly admissible to show that the pass had not been issued as a gratuity, but as a part of a contract entered into between the parties upon a mutual consideration. The witness could have been interrogated with no other purpose than to bring the case if possible within the rule firmly established in Railroad Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, and Railway v. Stevens, 95 U. S. 655. See, also, Knott v. Botany Bay Mills, 179 U. S. 69; The Kensington, 183 U. S. 263. The negotiation, whatever it included, was conducted by him, yet all that he could say was, "That at the time the pass for Mrs. Boering was given him there were given to witness four other passes, two being to Mr. Shoemaker, general manager of the Moxley advertising service, and Mrs. Shoemaker; one to Mr. Edwards, the Baltimore agent of the advertising service; and one to Mr. J. D. Boering, all being issued at the same time and pursuant to the same conversation with General Passenger Agent Lewis of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company." This does not show that any contract was entered into between the parties relating to advertising and incidental transportation of either the witness or his wife. No attempt was made to relate the "conversation" which is said to have accompanied the delivery of the passes. The failure of her husband and co-plaintiff to make a definite statement concerning a matter completely within his knowledge ought not to operate to the plaintiff's advantage. From any point of view, however, the only rational inference from the witness' entire statement, is that there was no contract embracing the issue of the pass to his wife, but that it was a gratuity—a compliment as expressed on its face.

2. We are also of the opinion that there was no error in refusing to permit the plaintiff's husband to answer the questions set out in the bill of exceptions, the purpose being to show that Mrs. Boering had not seen the conditions printed on the back of the pass; that she had not authorized him to procure the pass; and that she had never assented to his waiving her right to recovery for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the company's agents or otherwise:

This conclusion covers also the error assigned on the refusal to instruct the jury to the effect that they should disregard the conditions on the back of the pass and find for the plaintiff, "if she never had seen or known, prior to the accident, of the contents of the pass or ticket which her husband showed to the conductor as entitling her to ride on defendant's road."

Now if the plaintiff had been able to show that the pass had been issued to her under conditions sufficient to make her carriage one for hire in any legal sense, then, (assuming that we need not determine, namely, that she was not bound by the agency and knowledge of her husband), it would, undoubtedly, have been competent for her to show that her attention had not been called to the indorsed stipulation, and that she had never given her assent to it. The Majestic, 166 U. S. 375, 385.

But, as before stated, the plaintiff was in no sense a passenger for hire, and hence it was of no consequence whether or not she knew of and had assented to the assumption of the risk of accident imposed by the indorsement. No matter what may have been the authority of her husband to act for her in the original receipt of the pass, she accepted it and willingly availed herself of its privilege, and must, therefore, be held bound by its conditions. Quimby v. Boston and Maine RR., 150 Mass., 365, 367; Griswold v. N. Y., etc., RR., 53 Conn. 371; Muldoon v. Seattle R'w'y Co., 10 Wash. 311; I. C. RR. v. Read, 37 Ill. 486.

The gift and the condition were interdependent and inseparable. She could not enjoy the gift without subjecting herself to the operation of the condition upon which it was made.

3. The facts of the case, as we have seen, preclude the idea of plaintiff's carriage as part of the consideration of a contract, of which it is collateral, and hence are not governed by the rule of decision in Railroad v. Lockwood, and other like cases. Undoubtedly, the principle of decision in Railroad v. Derby, 14 How. 468, can have no application, because there the plaintiff rode on the special invitation of the president of the company without any stipulation or condition whatever.

The question which they do present, and upon which the decision must turn, is this: Could the defendant, in extending the privilege of gratuitous passage to the plaintiff, couple it with a condition lawfully binding her to assume the risk of accident caused by the negligence of its agents?

This question is an open one in this jurisdiction, and its difficulty is attested by the conflicting decisions of many of the State courts of last resort, which, with commendable industry and skill, have been collated on the briefs of counsel.

It would serve no useful purpose to recite or review those decisions, the majority of which, it may be conceded, support the contention of the plaintiff.

The ground of that contention is, that the occupation of a common carrier is of such a nature that it would conflict with settled public policy to permit one, under any circumstances, to stipulate against liability for injuries resulting from negligence in the performance of its duties.

It cannot be denied that the duty of the common carrier is to carry its passengers in safety, and that this duty is not dependent upon contract alone; that the duty is in the nature of a public one and that the public interest is directly involved in its performance.

For these reasons, a sound, well established rule of public policy will not permit the carrier to impose special terms of an unreasonable nature (as, for example, the assumption of the risk of damage occasioned by the negligence of the carrier or its agents), upon one who, practically compelled to avail himself of its services, nevertheless pays something in the shape of valuable consideration therefor. To uphold a condition exempting the carrier from liability for negligence under such circumstances would strongly tend to induce a relaxation of that high degree of care essential to the safety of the multitudes who daily avail themselves of the services of common carriers. But sound and expedient as this rule of public policy undoubtedly is, under the conditions before stated, we can not bring ourselves to the conclusion that the reasoning on which it is founded has any application to the case of one who accepts a free passage as a gratuity.

A strictly free passenger does not higgle with the carrier and consent to the condition in order to obtain a reduced rate of passage, nor does he consent to it in order to obtain a reasonable rate of freight for property which he must accompany or follow to its destination. There is no inequality between him and the carrier in the transaction, for he is not one who, being practically compelled to take passage, and having the right to demand it upon a reasonable consideration, is unable to resist the imposition of special terms. He is a mere seeker and recipient of favor, and ought to be estopped to repudiate the condition upon which that favor was conferred. So to hold—to use the appropriate words of Judge Putnam in the circuit court in a recent and like case—"conforms the law to the moral sense which justly holds those who accept gratuities and acts of hospitality to perform the conditions on which they were granted." Duncan v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 113 Fed. Rep. 508.

Our conclusion accords also with that of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in a well considered case, and the reasons therefor are so well stated in their opinion that we shall quote from it at length: "There can be no difficulty in the adjustment of terms where passes are solicited as gratuities. * * * The instances can not be so numerous that any temptation will be offered to carelessness in the management of their trains, or to an increase in their fares, in both of which subjects the public is interested. In such instances, one who is ordinarily a common carrier does not act as such, but is simply in the position of a gratuitous bailee. The definition of the common carrier, which is that of a person or corporation pursuing the public employment of conveying goods or passengers for hire, does not apply under such circumstances. The service which he undertakes to render is one which he is under no obligation to perform, and is outside of his regular duties. In yielding to the solicitations of the passenger, he consents for the time being to put off his public employment, and to do that which it does not impose upon him. The plaintiff was in no way constrained to accept the gratuity of the defendant; it had been yielded to him only on his own solicitation. When he did, there is no rule of public policy, we think, that prevented the carrier from prescribing, as the condition of it, that it should not be compelled, in addition to carrying the passenger gratuitously, to be responsible to him in damages for the negligence of its servants. It is well known that, with all the care that can be exercised in the selection of servants for the management of the various appliances of a railroad train, accidents will sometimes occur from momentary carelessness or inattention. It is hardly reasonable that, besides the gift of free transportation, the carrier should be held responsible for these, when he has made it the condition of his gift that he should not be. Nor, in holding that he need not be under these circumstances, is any countenance given to the idea that the carrier may contract with a passenger to convey him for a less price on being exonerated from responsibility for the negligence of his servants." Quimby v. Boston and Maine R. R. Co., 150 Mass. 365, 370, 371.

After careful consideration of the opposing decisions by learned courts for whose opinions we have the highest respect, we are constrained to say that we fail to see any substantial grounds for invoking a rule of public policy that would permit the free pass in this case to stand as a contract of carriage, and strike down the condition without which it would not have been given. The plaintiff had no right to demand carriage without consideration; the carrier was under no obligation to furnish it. Instead of purchasing an unconditional ticket, as was done for the friend who traveled upon their invitation, she accepted free transportation upon express condition. To regard the promise to carry, for which there was no consideration upon any theory of the law of contract, as a contract for carriage, and deny the obligation of the express condition upon which it was granted, seems to us to run counter to the time-honored and paramount rule of pulic policy that upholds the cherished right of freedom of contract. In a recent case, the Supreme Court of the United States said, after declaring that there was no disposition to depart from the salutary doctrine of the Lockwood and Stevens cases: "At the same time it must not be forgotton that the right of private contract is no small part of the liberty of the citizen, and that the usual and most important function of courts of justice is rather to maintain and enforce contracts, than to enable parties thereto to escape from their obligation on the pretext of public policy, unless it clearly appear that they contravene public right or the public welfare." B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Voight, 176 U. S. 498, 505. That case involved the contract between a carrier and an express company exempting the carrier from liability for damages to the messenger of the express company, that might be caused by the negligence of the carrier.

The stipulation, having been consented to by the messenger, was upheld as within the freedom of contract and not opposed to any rule of public policy. In our opinion, the case at bar comes clearly within the principle of that decision.

Finding no error, the judgment will be affirmed with costs. It is so ordered. Affirmed.

OCTOBER TERM, 1903.

No. 174.

JOHN D. BOERING AND MEARLIN G. BOERING, HIS WIFE,
Plaintiffs in Error,

vs.

CHESAPEAKE BEACH RAILWAY COMPANY.

BRIEF SUBMITTED ON BEHALF OF PLAINTIFFS IN ERROR.

This is an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia affirming the judgment in favor of the defendant in error rendered herein in the supreme court of the District of Columbia on March 3, 1902.

The facts relied upon in the circuit court by the plaintiffs in error and the assignments of errors to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which are also relied upon in the Supreme Court of the United States, are briefly as follows:

Statement of Facts.

On September 2, 1900, Mr. and Mrs. Boering and a Mr. Burke were on one of the passenger trains of the defendant returning to Washington from Chesapeake Beach. The train near Chesapeake Junction left the main track and, running through an open switch, collided with a string of empty coaches left upon the siding.

Mrs. Boering was severely injured. The collision was the result of gross negligence, not only on the part of the defendant's agents and employees, but also on the part of the defendant itself. The switch was unprovided with the customary lights and warning signals and was without a watchman, and had remained open ever since the earlier train had come in and been left on the siding. (See testimony of Walters, Daley, and Riordan, Rec., p. 9.)

Mrs. Boering, for conformity, joining her husband in the action, brought suit against the defendant, which, among other pleas, set up that she was a gratuitous passenger, riding upon a free pass with the following stipulation printed in legible type on the back thereof:

"The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise" * * * (Rec., p. 5).

To this plea the plaintiffs demurred, but the demurrers were overruled.

At the trial the pass was admitted in evidence (Rec., p. 11) over plaintiffs' objection, notwithstanding there was no evidence that the female plaintiff ever saw, was aware of, or assented to the stipulation on the back thereof, or knew the terms of its procurement, or indeed knew it was a free pass. It then further appeared that General Passenger Agent Lewis, during the negotiation of an advertising contract with the Moxley Advertising Company, of which Mr. Boering was an agent, gave the latter a number of passes for the general manager and other officers of the Moxley Advertising Company, and two for Mr. and Mrs. Boering. The pass to Mr. Boering was identical with that to Mrs. Boering, except that his read "Acc. adv. contract, Moxley adv. service," and the one bearing her name "Complimentary" (Rec., p. 11).

Mr. Boering testified that he had kept both passes in his pocket-book except on the several occasions when he had exhibited them to the conductor, and that Mrs. Boering had never seen them, nor had he told her more about them when inviting her to go with him than that he had been given transportation "in conjunction with the contract for advertising" (Rec., p. 12).

Mrs. Boering also testified that she never had seen the passes until after the accident (Rec., pp. 9–10).

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

I. The court below erred in admitting in evidence the pass upon which Mrs. Boering was riding (Rec., p. 10).

II. The court erred in admitting said pass in evidence until a foundation had been laid therefor by showing that Mrs. Boering knew the contents thereof (Rec., pp. 9–10).

III. The court erred in admitting said pass in evidence after Mrs. Boering's denial on cross-examination that she had ever seen it until after the accident, this being all the evidence on that point at the time the said pass was so admitted in evidence (Rec., pp. 9–10).

IV. The court erred in refusing to allow Mr. Boering to answer the following questions:

(a.) "Did Mrs. Boering ever see the conditions on the back of this ticket prior to the time of the accident; the ticket that was made out in her name?"

(b.) "Did Mrs. Boering ever authorize you to procure a free pass for her over the Chesapeake Beach railroad?"

(c.) "Did Mrs. Boering ever assent to you waiving her right to a recovery from this company for negligence?"

(d.) "Did Mrs. Boering ever, in any way, assent to your procuring transportation for her over this railroad and relieving the company from any liability therefrom on the grounds of negligence?" (Rec., p. 13).

V. The court erred in refusing to grant the plaintiff's second and third prayers (Rec., p. 14).

ARGUMENT.

The contention of the plaintiffs in error presents to this court only two questions of law, one involving the validity of a stipulation printed on the back of a free pass purporting to relieve a railway carrier from liability to a gratuitous passenger from injury caused by the negligence of the carrier; and if that point be decided in favor of the carrier's non-liability, then whether such exemption can be extended to the case of a married woman who was injured while riding on the invitation of her husband, an advertising solicitor, to whom the pass had been issued in her name, but without her knowledge or request, and of the stipulation on the back of which she was ignorant at the time of the injury and whose only knowledge concerning the same was that it was "transportation procured in conjunction with a contract for advertising."

These two points, which cover all the assignments of error, are hereinafter separately discussed.

Point 1.

A public carrier may not limit its common-law liability for negligence to passengers by special agreement. This rule, founded on public policy, operates no less for the protection of gratuitous passengers than for passengers for hire.

Believing the law to be as above stated, the plaintiffs in error are willing to concede, for the purposes of argument, that the plaintiff was the holder of that rare if not entirely non-existent thing called a free pass. This court in Phila. & Reading R. R. vs. Derby, 14 How., 485, has said that a pass is not free or gratuitous in the sense in which these words were used by the learned court below if the consideration therefor be "pecuniary or otherwise." It is not sought to give a greater significance to the use of these words than this court perhaps attached to them; but in view of the language of the court below to the effect that from any point of view, however, the only rational inference from the witness' entire statement is that there was no contract embracing the issue of the pass to his wife, but that it was a gratuity a compliment as expressed on its face (opinion, Rec., p. 19), and in view of the approval with which the court below quotes the language of Judge Putnam (Duncan vs. Maine Cen. R. R. Co., 113 Fed. Rep., 508), to the effect that the denial of the right of recovery to "a mere seeker and recipient of favor" "conforms the law to the moral sense which justly holds those who accept gratuities and acts of hospitality to perform the condition on which they were granted" (opinion of the court, Rec., p. 21), the plaintiffs in error are constrained to insist that the record abundantly discloses that, whether the consideration for their carriage comes within the classification of "pecuniary or otherwise," they, and certainly the female plaintiff, were neither the seekers nor recipients of favor.

Moreover, it is submitted that the very facts set out in the opinion of the learned court below as follows:

"Mr. Boering was called on behalf of the plaintiff, and testified that he was advertising solicitor and superintendent for 'Moxley bill-posting service.' His testimony corroborated that of his wife and others respecting the accident. Afterwards he was recalled by the plaintiff, and, as recited in the bill, gave evidence tending to prove that at the same time the pass for Mrs. Boering was given him there were given to witness four other passes, two being to Mr. Shoemaker, general manager of the Moxley advertising service, and Mrs. Shoemaker; one to Mr. Edwards, the Baltimore agent of the advertising service, and one to Mr. J. D. Boering, one of the parties named as plaintiff in this action, all being issued at the same time and pursuant to the same conversation with General Passenger Agent Lewis, of the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company.

indicate that the pass given to Mr. Boering for his wife and marked "Complimentary" was no more complimentary than the drovers' pass in the drovers'-pass cases or the pass given Mr. Boering, which frankly conceded on its face that it was given on "Acc. adv. contract Moxley ad. service."

If the law, uncertain as it sometimes is, must be "made to conform" to a highly sensitive moral sense, differing in each individual, and the pronouncements of which are not susceptible of review by any earthly tribunal, the plaintiffs in error insist that the facts of this case enable them to maintain their action without any forfeiture of proper self-respect. It may be that really free passes at times have been given and accepted in fraud of the stockholders, for whom the officers issuing them are merely trustees, of a railway company; but it is the prevailing opinion generally that one who seeks a free pass, offering in return no present or prospective consideration, "pecuniary or otherwise," does not receive it. It is true that the Congress of the United States found itself obliged to forbid the issuance of free passes by interstate railroads; but whether this was due to the fact that no real compliment was involved in the gift, the general character of the donees being well understood, or whether this action was taken primarily for the protection of the stockholders, or for that of the public, counsel are not advised. The subject evidently called for an expression of public policy.

Wherein consists the public policy contravened by stipulations against the responsibility of the public carrier for injuries due to its negligence or that of its servants?

Before citing the American authorities in detail or attempting an analysis of the decision of the learned court below, a brief review of the whole subject may be in order.

The struggle of the public against the railroad carriers has been an interesting one. In England there were four stages in the history of this conflict, ending in a complete judicial victory for the large and influential corporate interests, until in 1857 Parliament, in the railway and canal traffic act, came to the rescue of the public. The first stage was represented by the earlier English decisions, which permitted a common carrier of goods to exempt itself by private contract from the extraordinary liability as an insurer. The second stage was reached when this exemption of the carrier by private agreement was extended beyond a mere release from the extraordinary liability as an insurer and was permitted to include an exemption from ordinary liability for negligence. The third stage, which left the public helpless and throttled, was reached when for the private agreement between the parties was substituted a notice by the carrier and a presumption of indirect assent by the shipper.

The point was now reached where the shipper, whether a bailor for hire or not, was in every case, without any proof of real assent to the agreement, bound by a presumption of indirect assent to the most unreasonable restrictions or limitations upon the carrier's liability, including the release of the latter from its ordinary liability for negligence. (This is the case at bar.)

At this stage it was found necessary in England that the "law should be made to conform to the moral sense" of the British public, and the railway and canal traffic act was passed. By it limitations of the common-law liability of carriers could be confined to those which were reasonable in character and the abuse of the doctrine of indirect assent was abolished; also by it even the pass-taker could be bound only by private agreement against the carrier's liability—when he signed his name at the bottom of the written or printed stipulation.

In the United States the law of passenger carriers, with the exception of the precise point at bar, has been perfectly well settled by this court, in which it has been held:

I. That passenger carriers are liable for the consequences of negligent acts to all passengers, gratuitous or otherwise.

Steamboat New World vs. King, 16 How., 469.

Phila. & Reading R. R. Co. vs. Derby, 14 How., 485.

II. That this liability cannot be evaded by private agreements, all such agreements being per se unreasonable in character and void as against public policy.

Vide Lockwood vs. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 363.

In the only cases where this court was called on to pass on the validity or reasonableness of such agreements in the case of passengers other than those for hire, the court inevitably discovered some consideration, "pecuniary or otherwise," which made it unnecessary to pass on the precise point presented by this appeal. The language of this court in its opinions and the criticisms contained in them of the very arguments which in every case have been relied upon by those courts which have sought to exclude the gratuitous passenger from his legal remedy are so persuasive of the impropriety of excluding the latter from the protection the public welfare requires should be thrown around all passengers that it is difficult to understand how any Federal court could have reached a contrary conclusion.

The Lockwood decision, as stated by this court in B. & O. Southwestern R'y vs. Voigt, 170 U. S., 505, "proceeded mainly on two principles. First, the importance which the law justly attaches to human life and personal safety, and which therefore forbids the relaxation of care in the transportation of passengers (note the omission of the words "for hire") which might be occasioned by stipulations relieving the carrier from responsibility." Second, "the position of advantage which is possessed by companies exercising the business of common carriers over those who are compelled to deal with them."

Are those two principles, and especially the former, less applicable today, and in the case of a free passenger, than they were in 1873, in the case of a drover riding on a pass given because of a shipment of cattle? As respects time, every passing year has but tightened the grasp of a few railways on transportation facilities, until today there is a virtual monopoly in a few hands of transportation between the most important American cities. As respects travelers, as distinguished from employees, what sound reason is there for a discrimination between travelers riding absolutely free and those riding on contracts based on considerations of slight and perhaps intangible value?

At the outset let us define what relation defendant bore to plaintiff. The three classes of persons on trains are passengers, trespassers, and employees or quasi-employees. Plaintiff was on the train by invitation, and belongs to the first class.

Phil. & Reading R. R. Co. vs. Derby, 14 How., 485.
Steamboat New World vs. King, 16 How., 469.

As a consequence of that relationship, the law long ago settled the general duty of defendant to plaintiff to be as stated in the Derby case, supra:

"When carriers undertake to carry persons by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they be held to the greatest possible care and diligence, and whether the consideration for such transportation be pecuniary or otherwise, the personal safety of the passenger should not be left to the sport of chance, or the negligence of careless agents."

As said in Lockwood, supra, 377:

"In regulating the public establishment of common carriers, the great object of the law was to secure the utmost care and diligence in the performance of their important duties—an object essential to the welfare of every civilized community. Hence, the common-law rule which charged the common carrier as an insurer. Why charge him as such? Plainly for the purpose of raing the most stringent motive for the exercise of carefulness and fidelity in his trust. In regard to passengers, the highest degree of carefulness and diligence is expressly exacted. In the one case, the securing of the most exact diligence and fidelity underlies the law, and is the reason for it; in the other it is directly and absolutely prescribed by the law. It is obvious, therefore, that if a carrier stipulate not to be bound to the exercise of care and diligence, but to be at liberty to indulge in the contrary, he seeks to put off the essential duties of his employment. And to assert that he may do so seems almost a contradiction in terms."

The first of the two principal grounds underlying the rule of public policy applied in the Lockwood decision to stipulations for immunity for negligence on the part of passenger carriers is not controverted in terms by those decisions approved and followed in the case at bar by the learned court below, nor is it seriously contended that "the imporance which the law justly attaches to human life and personal safety, and which therefore forbids the relaxation of care in the transportation of passengers which might be occasioned by stipulations relieving the carrier from responsibility" (Voigt case, supra), does not apply with equal force to all passengers. The policy of those courts, on the other hand, has been consistently to ignore this fundamental and controlling consideration and to base the exception of the gratuitous passenger from the safeguard of law upon the supposed inapplicability to the latter class of passengers of the argument assigned by the Supreme Court in the Lockwood decision as a second and merely additional ground for holding such stipulations void as against public policy.

This second and additional argument is stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley in the Lockwood decision, as follows:

"If the customer had any real freedom of choice, if he had a reasonable or practicable alternative, and if the employment of the carrier were not a public one, charging him with the duty of accommodating the public in the line of his employment, then, if the customer chose to assume the risk of negligence, it could with more reason be said to be his private affair and no concern of the public. But the condition of things is entirely different, and especially so under the modified arrangements which the carrying trade has assumed. The business is almost concentrated in a few powerful corporations, whose position in the body politic enables them to control it. They do, in fact, control it and impose such conditions upon travel and transportation as they see fit, which the public is compelled to accept. These circumstances furnish an additional argument, if any were needed, to show that the conditions imposed by common carriers ought not to be adverse (to say the least) to the dictates of public policy and morality" (Lockwood, supra).

Is not this language of the Lockwood case as apt in expressing the situation of the person who for business or pleasure must travel between certain railroad points, but by voluntary offer of the carrier or on his own request is permitted to travel free, as that of the paying passenger? The pass-taker is, as we have seen in the Derby and King cases, a passenger. The carrier is a common carrier pursuing a public employment in which the exercise of the utmost care and fidelity for safety of passengers are its essential duties, and under the present arrangements, whereby a few carriers monopolize transportation, whatever conditions—whether of compensation, of conditions involving immunity of the carrier from liability for failure to perform its duty of safe transportation, or of improper, uncomfortable, or inadequate vehicles of transportation—the carrier cares to impose, the traveler wishing to go from one place to another must accept, subject only to his right subsequently to invoke the aid of the law to protect him. The pass-taker is as much under the real constraint referred to by the court in the Lockwood case and subsequent cases as any other passenger. The constraint is a transportation constraint primarily, AND NOT A COMPENSATION RESTRAINT, the latter, like the constraint under which the bailor agrees to exempt the carrier from bailment liability, being merely an incident of the former.

By the great weight of authority in this country stipulations against liability of common carriers for negligence are void even in the case of gratuitous passengers.

Of the foregoing the one New Jersey and all three of the New York decisions were by divided courts. Moreover, in the New York cases and the Massachusetts case distinctions were sought to be made between ordinary negligence and gross negligence, and between the negligence of the corporation itself and that of its agents.

The invalidity of these distinctions, though helpful to the case at bar (in which the negligence was that of the defendant itself, and of the grossest kind), has been clearly pointed out in the Lockwood case (supra), which, it is of interest to note, came up for review from New York and resulted in a reversal, the Supreme Court distinctly refusing to follow the New York cases.

The Voigt case was cited below by the appellee, but a perusal of that case (176 U. S., 518) will show that it belongs to a separate group of cases, and that in the decision the court reitered its views as to the invalidity of stipulations against liability to passengers. The Voigt case was decided in favor of the railway company on the ground (which in passing it may be said was the real ground upon which the Griswold case, cited below by the appellee, should have been placed) that Voigt, an express messenger, was in no sense a passenger, but rather an employee who had voluntarily assumed the risk of his fellow-servants' negligence. The court, however, in again reviewing the question of common carriers seeking to stipulate against their negligence held (italics ours):

"That all attempts of carriers by general notices or special contract to escape from liability for losses to shippers or injuries to passengers, resulting from want of care or faithfulness, cannot be regarded as reasonable and just, but as contrary to a sound public policy and therefore invalid."

Moreover, in the Voigt case, not only was the Lockwood decision distinguished on the ground that public policy does not in the case of carriers impose a liability toward an employee or quasi-employee in a case where such liability is not generally imposed by law upon other employees, as in the case of injury through the negligence of a fellow-servant, the risk of which was voluntarily assumed as a part of his employment, but also upon the ground that an express messenger, unlike a passenger, gratuitous or otherwise, is not under any transportation constraint—i. e., he is not in the position of one of the public who is on the passenger coach in which and by means of which alone he can be transported from point a to point b, and in order to arrive at his destination has no choice but to ride in that passenger coach and to ride in it upon whatever conditions, reasonable or otherwise, the carrier, who is a monopolist of the means of transportation between point a and point b, may care to impose.

The constraint upon the express messenger is to assume the risk of accident incidental to his employment, or seek employment elsewhere. As this form of constraint exists in the case of every employee, and is imposed by law as being in accordance with a sound public policy, and grows in no way out of any inequality of position between employer and employee, the messenger cannot complain that he is not put on a par with the passenger, the constraint upon whom is the result of a transportation monopoly, beneficial as it may be in certain aspects, but a monopoly which nevertheless denies him the freedom of contract enjoyed by the servant or messenger. The fundamental distinction between the Lockwood and the Voigt cases rests upon the fact that there is a monopoly of transportation; but in this country there is no monopoly of employment. To show how little the Voigt case, so much relied on, is in point, Voigt was held not to be a passenger, although his transportation was paid for by the express company.

The reasoning used by the learned court below covered almost every argument advanced by other decisions in favor of immunity to the carrier, and, it is respectfully submitted, will be found on analysis inadequate to justify the conclusion reached.

The learned court below, after stating the proposition involved under this head of the appellant's contention, in the following terms, "The ground of that contention is, that the occupation of a common carrier is of such a nature that it would conflict with settled public policy to permit one, under any circumstances, to stipulate against liability for injuries resulting from negligence in the performance of its duties" (opinion of the court, Rec., p. 20), frankly admits the weight of American authority to favor the affirmative (Rec., p. 20), but proceeds to set forth at some length the grounds upon which it feels constrained to join the minority in holding a contrary view:

"It cannot be denied that the duty of the common carrier is to carry its passengers in safety, and that this duty is not dependent upon contract alone; that the duty is in the nature of a public one and that the public interest is directly involved in its performance. For these reasons, a sound, well-established rule of public policy will not permit the carrier to impose special terms of an unreasonable nature (as, for example, the assumption of the risk of damage occasioned by the negligence of the carrier or its agents), upon one who, practically compelled to avail himself of its services, nevertheless pays something in the shape of valuable consideration therefor. To uphold a condition exempting the carrier from liability for negligence under such circumstances would strongly tend to induce a relaxation of that high degree of care essential to the safety of the multitudes who daily avail themselves of the services of common carriers. But sound and expedient as this rule of public policy undoubtedly is, under the conditions before stated, we cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that the reasoning on which it is founded has any application to the case of one who accepts a free passage as a gratuity.

"A strictly free passenger does not higgle with the carrier and consent to the condition in order to obtain a reduced rate of passage, nor does he consent to it in order to obtain a reasonable rate of freight for property which he must accompany or follow to its destination. There is no inequality between him and the carrier in the transaction, for he is not one who, being practically compelled to take passage, and having the right to demand it upon a reasonable consideration, is unable to resist the imposition of special terms. He is a mere seeker and recipient of favor, and ought to be estopped to repudiate the condition upon which that favor was conferred. So to hold—to use the appropriate words of Judge Putnam in the circuit court in a recent and like case—

'conforms the law to the moral sense which justly holds those who accept gratuities and acts of hospitality to perform the conditions on which they were granted.' Duncan v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 113 Fed. Rep., 508" (opinion of the court, Rec., p. 21).

The first ground of opinion appears, therefore, to be based upon the assumption that the rule of public policy which condemns special contracts by public carriers for exemption from negligence has its origin and sanction in the inequality of position between the carrier and the pay passenger, and, further, the reason for the rule ceasing in the case of gratuitous passengers, these "mere recipients of favor" are not within its protection. Before discussing the merits of this contention, in order to disembarrass the argument to follow, a brief criticism of the two other grounds of decision quoted from the Quimby and Duncan cases and approved and followed by the learned court below may be here permitted.

The first of these is as follows (italics ours):

"Our conclusion accords also with that of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in a well-considered case, and the reasons therefor are so well stated in their opinion that we shall quote from it at length: 'There can be no difficulty in the adjustment of terms where passes are solicited as gratuities. * * * The instances cannot be so numerous that any temptation will be offered to carelessness in the management of their trains, or to an increase in their fares, in both of which subjects the public is interested. In such instances, one who is ordinarily a common carrier does not act as such, but is simply in the position of a gratuitous bailee. The definition of the common carrier, which is that of a person or corporation pursuing the public employment of conveying goods or passengers for hire, does not apply under such circumstances. The service which he undertakes to render is one which he is under no obligation to perform, and is outside of his regular duties. In yielding to the solicitations of the passenger, he consents for the time being to put off his public employment, and to do that which it does not impose upon him'" (opinion of the court, Rec., p. 21).

Those parts of this contention upon which the more stress has been laid have been completely answered by this court in the Lockwood case.

Opinion of Bradley, J., in Lockwood vs. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 363, p. 376:

"It is argued that a common carrier by entering into a special contract with a party for carriage of his goods or person on modified terms drops his character and becomes an ordinary bailee for hire and therefore may make any contract he pleases, that is, he may make any contract whatever, because he is an ordinary bailee, and he is an ordinary bailee because he has made the contract. We are unable to see the soundness of this reasoning. It seems to us more accurate to say that common carriers are such by virtue of their occupation and not by virtue of the responsibilities under which they rest."

"The theory occasionally announced, that a special contract as to the terms and responsibilities of carriage changes the nature of the employment is calculated to mislead. The responsibilities of a common carrier may be reduced to those of an ordinary bailee for hire, whilst the nature of his business renders him a private carrier. Still, is there any good sense in holding that a railroad company, whose only business is to carry passengers and goods, and which was created and established for that purpose alone, is changed to a private carrier for hire by a mere contract with a customer, whereby the latter assumes the risk of inevitable accidents in the carriage of his goods? A common carrier undoubtedly may become a private carrier, or a bailee for hire, when, as a matter of accommodation or special engagement, he undertakes to carry something which it is not his business to carry."

P. 378: "But where a carrier has a regularly established business for carrying all or certain articles, and especially that carrier is a corporation created for the purposes of carrying trade, and the carriage of the articles is embraced within the scope of its chartered powers, it is a common carrier and a special contract about its responsibility does not divest it of that character."

P. 377: "But it is contended that although a carrier may not stipulate for his own negligence there is no good reason why he should not be permitted to stipulate for indemnity for the negligence of his servants, over whose actions in his absence, he can exercise no control."

P. 378: "Now, to what avail does the law attach these essential duties to the employment of the common carrier, if they may be waived in respect to his agents and servants, especially where the carrier is an artificial being, incapable of acting except by agents and servants? It is carefulness and diligence in performing the services which the law demands, not an abstract carefulness and diligence in proprietors and stockholders who take no active part in business. To admit such a distinction of the law of common carriers, as the business is now carried on, would be subversive of the very object of the law."

By reference to the italicised portion of the opinion in the Quimby case, however, it is open to inference, at least, that the learned judge who wrote that opinion had himself some misgivings as to the soundness of the contention that a public carrier ceased to be such by virtue of the particular contracts it might be pleased to make, and that there was a valid distinction between liability for agent's negligence and negligence by the corporation itself, and therefore based his decision, in the alternative, upon the theory that—

"The instances cannot be so numerous that any temptation will be offered to carelessness in the management of their trains, or to an increase in fare, in both of which subjects the public is interested."

Is the question then to be decided, not upon legal principle but upon transportation statistics? Apparently the court would have come to a different conclusion had it been competent for counsel to show, as the Indiana court did in Payne vs. Terre Haute Ry. Co., 157 Ind., 617, the class of gratuitous passengers to have been more numerous, although the judicial determination as to exactly what percentage of its total number of passengers the carrier could safely be permitted to be negligent without involving some diminution of care to its pay passengers undoubtedly would have been embarrassing.

Although the number of free passengers has been such as to cause the Congress of the United States to prohibit, in the case of interstate commerce carriers, this particular form of corporate eleemosynary enterprise, to the plaintiff at least, it seems that the proper solution of the question belongs to the domain of established legal principle rather than to the mathematical theory of probabilities. The rule of public policy forbidding such special contracts was intended as a safeguard not against $\frac{9}{10}$ nor yet against $\frac{99}{100}$ of the tendency to carelessness, which exemption from its consequences would be calculated to promote, but on the other hand to eliminate such tendency altogether; and by holding, as the least with which the law would be satisfied, not a mere degree of care commensurate with the amount paid for carriage, but in every case, pay or no pay, the extremest care on the part of those who employ "the powerful but dangerous agency of steam;" the courts have impliedly recognized this to be the true foundation of the rule, and this court in Railroad vs. Derby (14 How., 468) refused to consider the gratuitous carriage of Derby a ground for exonerating the company from any liability except that of a gratuitous bailee for the benefit of the bailor—i. e., as stated by writers on the subject of bailment, as a degree of skill and care less than that expected from an ordinarily prudent man who might have undertaken the same bailment for hire. In Lockwood, supra, this court refused to follow the New York courts, which held he could have paid the lawful statutory rate of fare. (See also Steamboat New World vs. King, 16 How., 469.) This court was certainly justified in failing to appreciate any striking analogy between a bale of goods and a human being.

But the most satisfactory, because the most practical, answer to this branch of the contention is to be found in the opinion of the court in Jacobus vs. St. Paul Ry. Co., 20 Minn., 127.

"The care and vigilance which the carrier exercises do not depend alone upon a mere sense of responsibility, or upon the existence of an abstract rule imposing stringent obligations upon him. It is the enforcement of the rule and of the liability imposed thereby, the mulcting of the carrier for his negligence which brings home to him in the most practical, forcible, and effectual way the necessity for strictly fulfilling his obligations. It may be that on a given occasion the gratuitous passenger is the only person injured who will proceed against the carrier, and practically enforce on the carrier the faithful discharge of his duty. These considerations ought to be decisive of the point that public policy requires that the rule as to the liability of the carrier for the safety of the passenger should not be relaxed though the passenger be riding on a conditioned free pass."

And further from the following extract from the opinion of this court in the Lockwood case (supra).

Commenting on the argument that the New York doctrine would not render railroads less careful, the court said:

"The fruits of this rule," says Judge Noah Davis in Stenson vs. N. Y. Central, 32 N. Y., "are already being gathered in increasing accidents through the decreasing care and vigilance on the part of these corporations and they will continue to be gathered until a just sense of public policy shall lead to legislative restriction on the power to make this kind of contracts."

In the case of Rose vs. Ry. Co., 39 Iowa, 246, all persons on the train were free-pass takers or employees.

The third and last ground of decision relied upon by the learned court below is based, it is respectfully submitted, upon an erroneous supposition and must fall with it. It is to this effect:

of carriage, and strike down the condition without which it would not have been given. The plaintiff had no right to demand carriage without consideration; the carrier was under no obligation to furnish it. Instead of purchasing an unconditional ticket, as was done for the friend who traveled upon their invitation, she accepted free transportation upon express condition."

In the Derby case above cited, certainly whatever rights the negligence of the defendant may have given him, it could not be contended that had the railroad refused to carry him save upon his paying the usual and reasonable fare, he could have maintained an action against it for failure to transport him; nor has the appellant in the case at bar ever contended that she had "the right to demand carriage without consideration." She did have the right to demand, however, that her bodily integrity be respected, and she submits that her consent, even had it been duly obtained beforehand, would not have excused the defendant for killing or maiming her carelessly, any more than it would for killing or maiming her feloniously. Indeed, for want of capacity to entertain the necessary intent, the defendant is limited to the former method of dealing with the too-confiding "recipients of its favor."

The real facts of the case at bar abundantly disclose that whatever may have been the connection between her husband's contract for advertising the defendant and the free pass given him in her name, the plaintiff was merely in the position of one on the train of the defendant, not by her solicitation, but by its kind and most disinterested invitation, and being injured while thereon by a supreme degree of negligence, by no means solely attributable to its mere servants, is told she is without redress because of a condition attached to this invitation, which it was never thought necessary to apprise her of, she being, in the language of the learned court below, "in no sense a passenger for hire." (Opinion of the court, Record, p. 50.)

We now return to the argument of the learned court below, which assumes the inequality of position between the pay passenger and the carrier to be the reason for the rule of public policy sought to be invoked in behalf of the plaintiff, and denies its protection to her on the theory that there is no such inequality in her position, and that, the reason for the rule ceasing, the rule itself ceases.

It will be seen that the learned court below has joined the ranks of those courts referred to heretofore, which, ignoring the equal applicability to gratuitous passengers of the primary reason assigned in the Lockwood case for holding stipulations such as the one which figures in this case void as against public policy, on the other hand has rested its conclusions to the contrary chiefly on the supposed inapplicability to gratuitous passengers of the second and merely additional argument used by this court in the Lockwood and subsequent decisions.

Moreover, the learned court takes the position that there is an inequality of position between the carrier and the pay passenger growing out of the carrier's practical monopoly of the facilities of transportation, by which the assent of the pay passenger to stipulations may be coerced, but that this monopoly, and consequent power of coercion, bears some mysterious relation to the rate of fare demanded, increases as the fare increases, and diminishes as the fare diminishes, until, if no fare at all be demanded, it ceases altogether.

Not only, therefore, does the public-transportation monopolist cease to become such as to the so-called gratuitous passenger, but the State ceases to have any concern for the preservation of his physical integrity. If such be the law and the number of free passes increases, the problem of race suicide need not concern the public mind. An alternative more in conformity with the moral sense is at hand.

Admitting, for the sake of argument, the second of these premises and conceding that had fifty cents been demanded of the plaintiff and paid by her, that circumstance would immediately have created an inequality of position between her and the defendant railroad company which otherwise could not exist, and would have nullified the special contract in question, the assumption contained in the first premise is, obviously, the result of the application to carriers of passengers of imperfect analogies from the law of common carriers, and as to the former is supported neither by reason nor authority.

Dr. Schouler, in his work on Bailments and Carriers (s. 342–'3, p. 35, 2d ed.), defines a common carrier to be a public carrier of goods for hire. The extraordinary liability of an insurer which the English law attaches to the occupation of a common carrier was based upon a fear, founded upon the early state of English society, that collusion with the enemies of society might, save for this reason, leave the shipper remediless.

See—

3 Co. Litt., 89*a*; 1 Co. Inst., 89*a*; Moore, 462.

Lord Holt in Coggs vs. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym., 909, 918.

Were no other justification for the continued imposition of this rule to be found in the conditions of modern society, it must long since have passed into desuetude.

With the introduction of steam and electricity and the monopoly of this important business by great corporations another sanction for the rule imposing this extraordinary liability is found in the inequality of position between the shipper and the common carrier. The real importance, however, of this change of base lies in the fact that to have allowed in the time of Lord Coke any limitation by private contract of the common-law liability of an insurer would have defeated its very purpose, while, on the contrary, not to allow such limitation within reasonable bounds would be, under modern conditions, to uselessly harass and burden a great branch of industry. Well, then, might the modern courts in many cases, bearing in mind the definition of a common carrier as a public carrier of goods for hire and remembering the modern basis of the rule affecting them with the extraordinary liability of insurers, hold, as they do, that, there being no such inequality of position between the gratuitous bailor and the common carrier, the liability of the latter, even in the absence of a special agreement to that effect and a fortiori, if such there be, is but that of a gratuitous bailee for the benefit of the bailor. However much confusion may have resulted from the application of this doctrine to passenger carriers, especially when the question is complicated by the carriage of the passengers' baggage, it is obvious no real analogy is disclosed.

"It is only in an age comparatively modern that the public transportation of persons from place to place, on hire, has in England and America called for the intervention of courts and the unfolding of legal principles."

Schouler, sec. 612, p. 648, 2d ed.

The element of hire, while generally present and the motive for engaging in the pursuit, is not a necessary part of the definition of the carrier of passengers, and one is none the less a passenger from whom, for special reasons, no hire is demanded.

Phila. & Reading R. R. vs. Derby, supra.

Steamboat New World vs. King, supra.

Moreover, while this inequality of position has not infrequently been assigned as an additional reason (drawn from some supposed analogy to the rule affecting common carriers) for the application of a like rule to pay passengers, it is submitted that the paramount consideration growing out of the requirement of a philanthropic age that the standard of duty of passenger carriers be kept up to a degree commensurate with the terrible consequences that must inevitably ensue, "whether the consideration be pecuniary or otherwise" or altogether absent, if "the personal safety of passengers" "be left to the sport of chance or the negligence of careless agents," originates and rests upon no analogy, but inheres in the very nature of the occupation of the carriage of human beings by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam.

Railroad vs. Lockwood, 17 Wall., 374.

Moreover, this court in the Lockwood decision and subsequent cases, while confining itself to the precise points presented for adjudication, has used language in its opinions which indicates a strong bias in favor of the universality of the rule contended for; and upon this subject Schouler gives the following résumé of the authorities discussed in his work upon Bailments and Carriers (contrasted with that announced by the New York and New Jersey courts):

"But the safer rule, and that which a broader appreciation of the public welfare seems to favor, is to the contrary; and the best supported American doctrine, which is fortified by the powerful sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States, views all these distinctions between free and paying passengers as unsound. According to this view of the carrier's liability there is an obligation imposed by public law which is superior to and independent of all private agreement; and whether it be upon a drover's pass, or any other free or limited ticket, whether upon expressed terms of restriction or otherwise, the carrier cannot shield himself from the consequences of his negligence; but towards all passengers the utmost care and diligence must be used, and the standard of duty must be according to the consequences that might ensue from carelessness."

Schouler on Bailments and Carriers, 2d ed., sec. 656, p. 714.

And in Railroad vs. Stevens, 95 U. S., 655, the court reviews the Lockwood decision in these words:

"Since, therefore, from our view of the case, it is not necessary to determine what would have been the right of the parties if the plaintiff had been a free or gratuitous passenger, we rest our decision upon Railroad Company v. Lockwood. We have no doubt of the correctness of the conclusions reached in that case. We do not mean to imply, however, that we should have come to a different conclusion had the plaintiff been a free passenger instead of a passenger for hire. We are aware that respectable tribunals have asserted the right to stipulate for exemption in such a case, and it is often asked with apparent confidence, 'May not men make their own contracts,' or, in other words, 'May not a man do what he will with his own?' The question at first sight seems a simple one. But there is a question lying behind that, 'Can a man call that absolutely his own which he holds as a public trust, by the public grant, and for the public use as well as for his own profit?' The business of the common carrier, in this country at least, is emphatically a branch of the public service; and the conditions on which that public service shall be performed by private enterprises are not yet entirely settled. We deem it the safest plan not to anticipate questions until they fairly arise and become necessary for our decision."

And in the Voigt case, after deciding in favor of the railroad company on the express ground that Voigt was not a passenger in any sense of the word, but, on the contrary, by his agreement expressly assumed, as a risk of his employment by the express company, any injury that might result from the carelessness of the agents employed in hauling the express car, and who were in a sense his fellow-servants, this court, again reviewing the question of carriers of passengers seeking to stipulate against their negligence, held (italics ours):

"That all attempts of carriers by general notices or special contract to escape from liability for losses to shippers or injuries to passengers, resulting from want of care or faithfulness, cannot be regarded as reasonable and just, but as contrary to a sound public policy and therefore invalid."

It is not contended that a public carrier necessarily has its duties to the public increased in proportion to the special benefits derived from the public in a charter of incorporation, but its charter does place certain duties and obligations on it.

The defendant in error, by the admission of the pleadings a corporation chartered as a public carrier of passengers, is sought to be held upon considerations based solely upon the nature of its employment.

Apart from its charter as such, the law imposes upon the carrier of passengers, as a matter of sound public policy, the duty to use the greatest care, skill, diligence, and foresight in the transportation of passengers.

This, then, as stated in the Lockwood case, supra, being an essential duty of the carrier toward the public, can the carrier, ignoring the State which created it, take the privileges and benefits conferred, and by private contract relieve itself from a burden in its very nature inherent in and inseparable from the carrier's public, corporate existence? It is true that the right of private contract is no small part of individual liberty, and in recognition of that fact the carrier has been permitted to stipulate against responsibility as an insurer. But there the line has been drawn. In the lives of its citizens the State has an interest. The carrier by its compact with the State has undertaken to exercise the highest diligence in order not to imperil any of those lives held sacred by the laws of all civilized States, and by no act of third parties can it divest itself of those duties, obligations, and liabilities. If it wishes to be relieved of the burdens that are an essential incident to its employment, it must secure relief from the State with which it publicly covenanted, and not from some stranger to that compact. As said by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in Galt vs. Express Co., MacArthur and Mackey, 138, the carrier's duty to the public "can neither be put aside nor impaired by the consent of individual members of the community." (See also Oscanyan vs. Arms Co., 103 U. S., 261; C., M. & St. Paul R. R. vs. Solan, 109 U. S., 135.) The carrier recognized Mrs. Boering as lawfully on its train, and this court has decided in Steamer New World vs. King, and the Derby case, supra, that she was there as a passenger and entitled to the same degree of care as if she had paid fare; and in the Lockwood case, supra, that the carrier's employment, and not its compensation, determined its duties and liabilities.

Those duties and liabilities, being placed there by operation of law, could not be sloughed off by private agreement inconsistent with and hostile to the public duties the carrier voluntarily assumed. The New York and other courts, which the United States Supreme Court has overruled, recognizing the force of this argument, upheld the validity of conditioned free passes on the ground that as to such passengers the carrier was divested of its public capacity and was a mere ordinary and gratuitous bailee. But, as we have seen, Lockwood, supra, the Supreme Court holds it is the employment, and not the remuneration or responsibilities, that determines the carrier's character, and its character being defined, so likewise is its duty and liability.

This fundamental consideration should be controlling.

POINT 2.

Even those States which permit a common carrier to limit its liability to gratuitous passengers require an express contract to that effect by the passenger.

The learned court below appears to have attached but the slightest importance to this point and disposes of it as follows:

"Now if the plaintiff had been able to show that the pass had been issued to her under conditions sufficient to make her carriage one for hire in any legal sense, then, (assuming that we need not determine, namely, that she was not bound by the agency and knowledge of her husband), it would, undoubtedly, have been competent for her to show that her attention had not been called to the indorsed stipulation, and that she had never given her assent to it. The Majestic, 166 U. S., 375, 385.

"But, as before stated, the plaintiff was in no sense a passenger for hire, and hence it was of no consequence whether or not she knew of and had assented to the assumption of the risk of accident imposed by the indorsement. No matter what may have been the authority of her husband to act for her in the original receipt of the pass, she accepted it and willingly availed herself of its privilege, and must, therefore, be held bound by its conditions. Quimby v. Boston and Maine RR., 150 Mass., 365, 367; Griswold v. N. Y., etc., RR., 53 Conn., 371; Muldoon v. Seattle R'w'y Co., 10 Wash., 311; I. C. RR. v. Read, 37 Ill., 486.

"The gift and the condition were interdependent and inseparable. She could not enjoy the gift without subjecting herself to the operation of the condition upon which it was made."

At this point it may be as well to call attention to the fact that the evidence fails to show any knowledge on Mrs. Boering's part that the "transportation" was a gift, if such, in fact, as to any one.

Before citing the only authorities which have seemed to the appellant to be in point on this proposition, it may be permitted to inquire upon what possible theory a contract can be upheld as a valid contract by which the defendant can escape the operation of a well-established principle of public law, where at the same time it is held unimportant that the contract can be shown to have been entered into at all.

Says the learned court below:

"Undoubtedly the principle of decision in Railroad v. Derby, 14 How., 468, can have no application, because there the plaintiff rode on the special invitation of the president of the company without stipulation or condition whatever" (opinion of the court, Rec., p. 20).

The court then says on the same page of the opinion:

"But as before stated, the plaintiff was in no sense a passenger for hire, and hence it was of no consequence whether or not she knew of and had assented to the assumption of risk of accident imposed by the indorsement" (opinion, Rec., p. 20).

Derby, "in no sense a passenger for hire," can recover because he did not stipulate away his right of action; the plaintiff, "in no sense a passenger for hire," cannot recover because it is of "no consequence" that she did not stipulate away her right of action!

While it is well settled that notices by carriers, whether published in general notices or otherwise promulgated, are to be generally regarded merely as offers to carry upon terms other than those which in the absence of agreement between the parties the law will supply, and as such must be consented to, or, as the law of contracts phrases it, "accepted," before the legal relations of the parties can be affected thereby, it is submitted the burden of proof of this contract offers no exception to the rule that the party setting it up must prove its execution.

American Transportation Co. vs. Moore, 5 Mich., 368.
Cooper vs. Berry, 21 Ga., 526.
Roberts vs. Riley, 15 La. Ann., 103.

Nevertheless, it is admitted that when parties reduce their agreement to writing, or when a written instrument such as a bill of lading or express receipt is universally understood and recognized in the commercial world to contain the written terms of the contract of shipment, one who accepts such a bill of lading or express receipt and ships under it will be held to its terms, so long as they are reasonable, whether the shipper chooses to peruse them or not. The bill of lading and all of its terms, whether written or printed on the face of the instrument, will bind those who agree to it as an expression in writing of their mutual agreement. In this sense we understand the learned court below to speak, for it is the only intelligible meaning of the words, when it further says:

"The gift and the condition [printed on the back] were interdependent and inseparable. She could not enjoy the gift without subjecting herself to the operation of the [otherwise uncommunicated] condition upon which it was made."

If it can be sustained at all, it will be seen that this contention can only be sustained upon the theory that an ordinary railroad ticket, and still more a free pass, are customarily known and understood to contain the written terms of the contract of carriage; if, indeed, that which is necessarily void for want of consideration could ever be assumed to be a contract at all. We submit that it by no means follows that because one's ticket or token of transportation is a free pass there is any condition of exemption of liability of the carrier attached to it. There are free passes, and many of them, containing no such stipulation, and the law does not take judicial notice that free passes have any such stipulation, and neither was the real plaintiff in this action bound or required to take notice that by riding on invitation of her husband on "transportation procured in conjunction with a contract of advertising" there was a waiver of any right of action she might have against the carrier, or to know that her fare had not been paid for. Indeed, she had a right to assume it had been paid for, "pecuniarily or otherwise." This is not a case where a presumption of knowledge will apply.

The law, however, is well settled on this point.

We quote again from Schouler (supra), § 468, page 497:

"And so, too, for similar reasons, our American current of authority sets against sustaining special conditions which the carrier has printed, written or stamped upon the back of his bill of lading, receipts or tickets; requiring affirmative proof in such a case, that the sender's attention was so called to the same, and so seasonably that his assent, as bailor, suitably extended to both sides of the instrument, which appears to be likewise, though less clearly, the English rule.

"Fraudulent intent on his part is not essential here, in order that the carrier be debarred from asserting the stipulation; but the fact that his course has put the consignor, in the matter of giving indirect assent at a decided disadvantage," citing—

Brown vs. East R., 11 Cush., 97.

And this notwithstanding the face of the ticket or document refers the reader to the back.

Malone vs. Boston & W. R., 12 Gray, 388.

The true issue is whether a certain special contract was entered into, and of this the proof required conforms to the ordinary rules of evidence.

Am. Trans. Co. vs. Moore, 5 Mich., 368.
Cooper vs. Berry, 21 Ga., 526.
Roberts vs. Riley, 15 La. Ann., 103.

Mrs. Boering's right of action sounds in tort, but the defendant's exemption from liability is wholly contractual. The burden was on defendant, and it has failed wholly to show any contract.

If a carrier claims that by contract his common-law liability has been limited, the burden is on him clearly to show it, and all such contracts will be interpreted most strictly against the carrier. Assent will not be presumed from facts and circumstances which do not clearly show an assent to such conditions in the contract on which the action is founded. In the absence of satisfactory proof showing that the shipper by assent and acquiescence has agreed to limit the liability of the carrier, the presumption is that he intended to insist on his common-law rights. Neither usage nor custom, though known to the shipper, which he has not clearly assented to as a condition of the contract of shipment can be set up to absolve the carrier from his common-law liability.

P. C. & St. L. R. Co. vs. Barrett, 36 Ohio St., 448.
Rosenfeld vs. Peoria R. R., 103 Ind., 121.
Jennings vs. Grand Trunk, 127 N. Y., 438.
Amn. T. Co. vs. Moore, 5 Mich., 368.
Edsall's case, 50 N. Y., 661.

So strong is this principle that in Mauritz vs. R. Co., 23 Fed. Rep., 765, it was held that a passenger unable to read the language in which a ticket is printed and to whom no explanation is made by the agent is not bound by special terms and conditions, as it was not, per se, negligence in him not to know them.

Blossom vs. Dodd's Express, 43 N. Y., 269.

Camden & A. R. Co. vs. Baldauf, 16 Pa. St., 67.

In Perkins vs. N. Y. Cent., 43 N. Y., 269, the court expressly placed its decision on the ground that Perkins had the terms of the contract pointed out to him and had six hours to read it. The present is not a case in which that case or Boylan vs. Hot Springs, 132 U. S., 146, would apply.

Of course, such a contract may be verbal or may even be inferred from circumstances, as from the acceptance of a pass and assent to the stipulations or conditions under which it is issued, but the only decisions of which we are aware are unanimous in requiring such knowledge and assent as a condition to holding the passenger bound thereby.

"But admitting the right of the common carrier thus to restrict his obligation, it by no means follows that he can do so by any act of his own. He is in the exercise of a sort of public office, and has public duties to perform from which he should not be permitted to exonerate himself without the assent of the parties concerned. And this is not to be implied or inferred from a general notice to the public, limiting his obligation, which may or may not be assented to. The burden of proof lies on the carrier, and nothing short of an express stipulation by parol or in writing should be permitted to discharge him from duties which the law has annexed to his employment."

New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. vs. Merchants Bank, 6 How. (U. S.), 344.

Mich. Cent. R. Co. vs. Hale, 6 Mich., 243.

The New York courts, which we have seen supra are among the minority in favor of relaxing the common-law liability of carriers, are at one with the decisions of the Supreme Court in requiring an express assent by the passenger to any stipulation against such liability.

"A contract exempting a carrier from liability for injury to its passengers, to be binding on the passenger, must be made by him or by some one authorized to act in his behalf."

Seyboldt vs. N. Y., etc., Ry. Co., 95 N. Y., 562.

See also Brewer vs. N. Y. C. Ry. Co., 124 N. Y., 59.

In Coppock vs. Long Island R. Co., 89 Hun., 186, where the owner of a horse had employed the plaintiff to travel in the car with the horse, and the plaintiff was injured, it was held that he could not be bound by a stipulation in the contract between the carrier and his employer, limiting the liability of the former, in the absence of proof that the stipulation was brought to his knowledge and assented to by him.

In Brewer vs. N. Y. L. E. W. Ry. Co., 124 N. Y., 59-64, the court says (italics ours):

"It, however, does not appear that the plaintiff's intestate had any knowledge or information of the provisions of the contract between the two companies. When he entered into the service of the express company he assumed the ordinary hazards incident to that business in his relation to that company, but there was no presumption or implied understanding that the messenger took upon himself the risks of injury he might suffer from the negligence or fault of the defendant. He was in no sense the employee of the defendant, nor could he, without his consent, be subjected to the responsibilities of that relation (Mo. Pac. v. Ivy, 17 Tex., 409). *He was lawfully in the car * * * and, although he paid no fare, was carried by virtue of no contract made by him personally with the latter, and must have understood that he was there pursuant to some arrangement of his employer with the defendant,* he was not necessarily by that fact chargeable with notice of the provisions in question of the contract. Presumptively he was entitled to protection against personal injury by the negligence of the defendant. And it is not seen how Brewer could, without his knowledge and consent, be placed in such relation to the defendant as to relieve it from liability to him for the consequences of his negligence affecting him personally."

In Louisville Ry. Co. vs. Nicholai, 4 Ind. App., 119, the court lays down this rule:

"Proof of the assent must be clear, for the law having imposed an important duty upon the carrier upon grounds of public policy, will not permit it to divest itself of this responsibility and throw the loss upon the other party, where the proof that the latter has so agreed is doubtful."

In the case at bar the only evidence heard below established clearly that the plaintiff, while she knew she was traveling on "transportation" procured in conjunction with an advertising contract, never had had the transportation in her possession, and did not know there was any stipulation on the back thereof, did not assent to same, and authorized no one to do so for her. The record discloses that at the time the pass was offered in evidence the defendant on cross-examination had elicited the fact that the plaintiff had never seen the pass until after the accident. She knew she was traveling on "transportation" procured "in conjunction with the contract for advertising," but nothing beyond this. It was not until the pass was admitted in evidence that further testimony was heard relative to the circumstances under which it had been issued, the plaintiff being left no alternative except an attempt to bring the case strictly within the views of the court below with respect to showing value given for the pass.

The evidence offered upon that point seemed sufficient, but the trial judge refused the plaintiff's second and third prayers, and in granting the first prayer gave the jury such an instruction as to what the law considered value for a ticket that the jury was obliged to find for the defendant.

The circumstances under which the passes were issued and the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Boering are conclusive upon the following points:

(a.) Mrs. Boering did not authorize her husband to procure any transportation whatever for her, and he was in no sense her agent.

(b.) Mrs. Boering had no notice of the stipulation on the back of the pass issued to her husband in her name, but retained by him.

It would appear, therefore, that, even if the stipulation were not void on the ground of public policy, the trial court erred in admitting it in evidence.

It is likewise clear that the trial judge was in error in refusing to permit Mr. Boering to testify further as to Mrs. Boering's ignorance of the stipulation on the back of the pass bearing her name. Counsel for the defendant based his objection on the ground that such evidence was immaterial, and that the trial judge had already so decided. The suggestion by the trial judge that "this evidence if material at all ought to have been brought out in the examination-in-chief" was purely voluntary. It would be a singular practice to compel the plaintiff to anticipate the defense and bring out testimony in rebuttal during the examination-in-chief.

If, as her husband merely, he could not release her right of action, did that relation constitute him her agent to agree upon the release in question?

"The express or implied assent of the sender or owner in due season, which is here requisite, may doubtless be given through the medium of agents, yet the sender's agent for delivering goods to the carrier for transportation is not necessarily his agent for binding him to special modifications of the carriage contract."

Schouler (supra), § 470, p. 500, and cases there cited.

Now, her right to sue for damages for injury to her person inured solely to her benefit, and nothing is better settled than that the husband may be constituted the agent of his wife for the disposal of her separate property, but that he is not such merely by virtue of the marital relation. (See Am. and Eng. Ency. (2d ed.), title Agency, p. 958.)

In McLaren vs. Hall, 26 Iowa, 297, the court held that although the husband may act as agent for the wife, yet, in order to bind her, he must be previously authorized to act as her agent or she must subsequently, with express or implied knowledge of his act, ratify it, and that the evidence necessary to establish a ratification in such case must be of a stronger and more satisfactory character than that required to establish a ratification by the husband of the act of the wife as agent or than as between independent parties.

The sole remaining question, therefore, is, Did the appellant either previously authorize Mr. Boering to procure transportation for her upon the condition in question, or, with knowledge express or implied, did she ratify his act in so doing?

An inspection of the record admits of but one answer. The circumstances under which the transportation was given to Mr. Boering show that he acted upon his own initiative if not, indeed, upon that of Passenger Agent Lewis, and his own and Mrs. Boering's testimony shows that the latter, so far from ratifying the stipulation, was ignorant of its existence until after the accident, likewise was ignorant that she was riding on a free pass, if there were one in this case, and neither had authorized nor acquiesced, expressly or impliedly, for implication requires knowledge or strong reason for inquiry, in her husband procuring her a free pass and waiving her common-law liability.

Respectfully submitted.

DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

IN ERROR TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

BRIEF FOR DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

Statement of the Case.

This was an action by plaintiffs in error to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the female plaintiff as the result of the alleged negligence of the defendant. The male plaintiff in error is said to have been joined merely "for conformity," and no injuries or damages are alleged to have been inflicted upon him personally, nor is any recovery sought to be obtained in his individual right.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that on September 2, 1900, the female plaintiff, together with her husband and another, went to Chesapeake Beach on the cars of the defendant, and while on the return journey the train in which they were riding ran into an open switch and collided with a train of empty coaches, throwing the female plaintiff from her seat into the aisle, where she was trampled upon by other passengers and thereby severely injured.

It also appears that there were no lights on the switch nor any switchman at the place of the accident, and there was some evidence tending to show that it was usual and customary to have either a light or a switchman at railroad yard sidings, such as this was.

At the time of the accident the female plaintiff was riding in the cars of the defendant upon a FREE PASS, containing on its face, among other things, the following:

"Chesapeake Beach railway.

"1900.

"Pass Mrs. J. D. Boering. Complimentary. Until De"cember 31st unless otherwise ordered."

And on its back:

"Not transferable. The person accepting and using this "pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to "person or property, whether caused by negligence of the "company's agents or otherwise."

At the trial the pass having been produced by the plaintiff, who was a witness in her own behalf, and she having testified that she had not bought any ticket from the defendant; that her husband attended to her "transportation;" that she was sitting in the seat with her husband when the conductor came along, and that he exhibited the "card" or pass to the conductor as evidencing her right to ride on the train; that she had not seen the "card" or pass before the accident—it (the pass) was, on the offer of the defendant, admitted in evidence notwithstanding the objection of plaintiffs' attorney, who noted an exception to the ruling.

Thereupon the male plaintiff was recalled to the stand and testified that the pass admitted in evidence was given to him in connection with four other passes, one of which was for Mr. Shoemaker, general manager of the Moxley advertising service; one for Mrs. Shoemaker, his wife; one for Mr. Edwards, the Baltimore agent of the advertising service, and the remaining one for himself; that all of said passes were issued at the same time and pursuant to the same conversation with General Passenger Agent Lewis, of the defendant company; and thereupon the plaintiff produced and the court admitted in evidence the pass issued to the witness (the male plaintiff), which, among other things, bore on its face the following:

"Chesapeake Beach railway.

"1900.

"Pass Mr. J. D. Boering. Acc. adv. contract Moxley ad. service."

And on its back appeared the same conditions as on the other.

The male plaintiff had told Mrs. Boering that he had procured "transportation" over defendant's railway "in conjunction with the contract of advertising" (p. 12).

He and Mrs. Boering had been to Chesapeake Beach on defendant's railway before the date of the accident, on other occasions, when they used these passes.

The court, at the instance of the plaintiffs, instructed the jury that—

(1st Prayer.) "If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff Mearlin G. Boering, (the female plaintiff,) while on the cars of the defendant, was injured by the negligence of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was riding on a ticket from (for) which value had been given, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and you are instructed that the defendant is not exonerated from liability in any degree from damages occasioned by such negligence by reason of any circumstances or conditions with reference to the defendant railway company's compensation for transporting the plaintiff."

And also that—

(4th Prayer.) "If the jury shall find in favor of the plaintiff, then in estimating damages you are to take into consideration the nature and extent of the injuries to the plaintiff and the pain attending thereupon and naturally incident thereto; the character and extent of her physical disability and the shock to her nervous system and results thereof resulting from such injuries, and return a verdict for what in money would be a fair recompense for the injuries received and suffering undergone by the plaintiff."

It will be seen from the foregoing statement that the trial justice left for the determination of the jury not only the question of negligence vel non, but also the question whether the female plaintiff at the time of the accident was in fact, as is averred in the declaration, "a passenger for hire upon one of the trains" of the defendant, or, as set up by the defendant's third plea (p. 5), "was riding upon a passenger train of said defendant upon and by virtue of a free pass which had been issued and given to said female plaintiff and accepted by her as a mere gratuity, and without any consideration having been received from her therefor, and upon the condition printed in legible type upon the back thereof, to wit:

"The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person or property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise."

The jury, having retired, returned its verdict for the defendant. Upon this verdict judgment was entered and this judgment was affirmed upon appeal to the Court of Appeals.

The question as to whether the pass upon which the female plaintiff was riding had been issued to her for value or not having been resolved by the jury against her and in favor of the defendant, the questions for the consideration of this learned tribunal on appeal are only those touching the admissibility of the pass in evidence and the refusal of the trial justice to instruct the jury in accordance with plaintiffs' third prayer (p. 13).

ARGUMENT.

I.

The first point presented by the plaintiff in error (Brief, 4) involves the validity and effect "of a stipulation printed on the back of a free pass purporting to relieve a railway carrier from liability to a gratuitous passenger from injury caused by negligence of the carrier," and seems to require no attention from us in view of the recent conclusion of that discussion by this court in the case of Northern Pacific Railway Company vs. Louise H. Adams and Frank H. Adams, No. 143, October term, 1903, decided February 23, 1904.

II.

Is the case at bar distinguishable in any of its salient features from the Adams case?

This brings us to the second proposition upon which counsel for plaintiff in error rely, namely, "Whether such exemption can be extended to the case of a married woman who was injured while riding on the invitation of her husband, an advertising solicitor, to whom the pass had been issued in her name, but without her knowledge or request, and of the stipulation on the back of which she was ignorant at the time of the injury and whose only knowledge concerning the same was that it was 'transportation procured in conjunction with a contract for advertising.'"

Although the answers of the female plaintiff were cunningly framed to evade the admission, it cannot be doubted that she was fully aware that she was traveling upon a free pass. She testified that Mr. Boering attended to her transportation, and that he did not buy a ticket for her, and that he did buy a ticket for a guest, a Mr. Burke; that she was sitting in the seat with her husband and saw him present to the conductor "them cards," and also the ticket which he had bought for their guest. She saw him handle these cards and present them to the conductor (9–10). Mr. Boering testified that his wife had accompanied him on other trips that summer to Chesapeake Beach, and on such occasions had made use of this same transportation.

Having used and enjoyed the benefits of the gratuitous "transportation," no matter by whom procured, she by such use and enjoyment became bound by the conditions upon which the "transportation" was issued; which conditions were plainly printed upon and formed a part of the so-called "transportation" or pass itself. By omitting, neglecting, or refusing to inform herself as to the conditions upon which the pass had been issued, she could not enjoy its privileges and at the same time avoid its obligations. Being a woman of at least ordinary intelligence, and presumably sui juris, she must be presumed to have done what at least it was her duty to have done, namely, to have informed herself as to the conditions under which she and her husband were enjoying the hospitality of the defendant company. The means of knowledge were immediately at hand. Even if her husband who procured the passes for both thought that it was "immaterial to her" (p. 12) whether same were issued upon conditions or not, it seems plain that it was her duty to have informed herself thereabouts.

The pass was rightfully admitted in evidence. It alone served to distinguish her from a mere trespasser upon the train.

If, as plaintiffs' attorneys seemed to think was the case, the jury could infer from the fact that she was on the passenger train that she was legally there, then it was surely competent for the defendant, on cross-examination, to develop affirmatively the precise conditions under which she was being carried, and having elicited from her the fact that she was riding upon the train by virtue of the possession of a pass, it seems clear that the pass itself and all the writing and printing upon it were admissible as evidence of the engagement or agreement between the parties in the premises, the effect of the stipulations printed upon the pass and their validity being questions of law for the sole determination, in the first instance, of the trial justice.

Whether the female plaintiff had actual knowledge of the conditions and their effect was immaterial.

Muldoon vs. Seattle Railway Co., 10 Washington, 310.

For even though the conditions by their terms require that the party using the pass should sign the same, if he does not in fact sign the same, yet uses the pass, he will be estopped to deny that he made the agreement specified thereon.

Quimby vs. Boston & Maine R. R. Co., 150 Massachusetts, 365.

Illinois Central R. R. Co. vs. Read, 37 Illinois, 486.

If the female plaintiff was bound by the conditions printed upon the pass which had been exhibited to defendant's conductor as establishing her right to be upon the train, it seems clear that the remaining questions which plaintiffs' attorney put to the male plaintiff and which the trial justice refused to allow him to answer were immaterial and no error arose from such refusal (Rec., p. 13, 4th assignment of error, Pl'ffs' Brief, pp. 3 and 4).

The questions were excluded by the trial justice on the ground that they were not proper on redirect examination and if admissible at all should have been put in the course of the examination-in-chief (R., 13).

Matters of this sort relating entirely to the order of proof and resting solely within the discretion of the trial justice do not afford a basis for reversal in appellate tribunals.

Jones on Evidence, vol. 3, secs. 809, 811.

"It is very clear that it is no abuse of discretion if the court refuses to allow the introduction of evidence out of its order when it is apparent that the relaxation of the general rule would further a mere trick or scheme or operate as a fraud upon one of the parties or encourage the tampering with witnesses to induce them to prop up a cause whose weakness has been exposed."

3 Jones on Evidence, sec. 811.

The rule upon this subject is well stated by Mr. Justice Story in the case of The Philadelphia & Trenton R. R. Co. vs. Stimpson (14 Pet., 448, 462), as follows:

"The mode of conducting trials, the order of introducing evidence, and the time when it is to be introduced, are, properly, matters belonging to the practice of the circuit courts, with which this court ought not to interfere; unless it shall choose to prescribe some fixed, general rules on the subject, under the authority of the act of Congress. Probably, the practice in no two States of the Union is exactly the same; and therefore, in each State, the circuit courts must necessarily be vested with a large discretion, in the regulation of their practice. If every party had a right to introduce evidence, at any time, at his own election, without reference to the stage of the trial in which it is offered, it is obvious, that the proceedings of the court would often be embarrassed, the purposes of justice be obstructed, and the parties themselves be surprised by evidence destructive of their rights, which they could not have foreseen, or in any manner have guarded against. It seems to us, therefore, that all courts ought to be, as indeed they generally are, invested with a large discretion on this subject, to prevent the most mischievous consequences in the administration of justice to suitors; and we think that the circuit courts possess this discretion in as ample a manner as other judicial tribunals. We do not feel at liberty, therefore, to interfere with the exercise of this discretion; and, indeed, if we were called upon to say, upon the present record, whether this discretion was, in fact, misapplied or not, we should be prepared to say that we see no reason to doubt that it was, under all the circumstances, wisely and properly exercised. It is sufficient for us, however, that it was a matter of discretion and practice, in respect to which we possess no authority to revise the decision of the circuit court."

III.

If the cause of action in this case for a breach of a contract to carry is that of the wife alone, as held by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in Rockwell vs. Traction Company (17 App. D. C., 369–380), then it logically follows that the right to contract for such carriage was her own individual right, and that her husband, in attending to her "transportation," as she expressed it, was acting in the matter as her agent, and bound her by accepting for her a complimentary pass containing the conditions exempting the company from liability in case of accident.

The power of a husband to act as the agent of his wife in relation to her separate or individual personal or property rights is well settled.

Weisbrod vs. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 18 Wis., 35.

And other cases cited in 1 A. & E. Enc. Law (2d ed.), 947–'8.

If, on the other hand, the conclusion of the same court in the case of Howard vs. Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company (11 App. D. C., 300–337), holding that the right of action for personal injuries sustained by the wife is not the statutory property of the wife, be, as we think it is, a correct statement of the law of this District on that subject, then, at the time this cause of action arose and suit thereon was instituted, the common-law rule prevailed in this District and the female plaintiff could not have sued without joining her husband in such action, as she did do. Any damages recovered or reduced to possession as a result of such joint action during the coverture would have been the property of the husband alone. This right to the proceeds of the litigation carries with it the right of the husband to release the entire right of action for damages, whether after judgment or before suit brought.

If the husband could release the wife's right of action for damages before or after suit brought it is difficult to see why he could not a pre-release in the form of a condition upon a free pass containing an exemption from liability, waive or bar her right to recover for personal injuries sustained while traveling on such pass.

The validity of a pre-release of an action for personal injuries was considered and sustained by this court in the case of Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railway Company vs. Voigt, 176 U. S., 498.

It is respectfully submitted that the concurring judgments of the two lower courts should be affirmed.

FREDERIC D. McKENNEY,
JOHN SPALDING FLANNERY,
Attorneys for Defendant in Error.

MARCH, 1900.

Supreme Court of the United States.

No. 174.—October Term, 1903.

John D. Boering and Mearlin G. Boering, his wife, Plaintiffs in Error, vs. Chesapeake Beach Railway Company.	In error to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

[March 21, 1904.]

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the Court.

This was an action brought in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by Mrs. Boering while riding in one of the coaches of the defendant, and caused, as alleged, by the negligence of the company. Her husband was joined with her as plaintiff, but no personal injury to him was alleged. The defense was that she was riding upon a free pass, which contained the following stipulation: "The person accepting and using this pass thereby assumes all risk of accident and damage to person and property, whether caused by negligence of the company's agents or otherwise." A trial before the court and a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the District, (20 D. C. App. 500,) and thereupon the case was brought here on error.

The contention of the plaintiffs is that the company was liable in any event for injuries caused by its negligence to one riding on its trains; and further, that if it were not liable for such negligence to one accepting a free pass containing the stipulation quoted, it was liable to Mrs. Boering, because it did not appear that she knew or assented to the stipulation. The trial court submitted to the jury the question whether she was, in fact, a free passenger, and as the verdict was in favor of the defendant, that question of fact was settled in favor of the company. Under those circumstances the recent decision of this court in Northern Pacific Railway Company v. Adams disposes of the first contention.

With reference to the second contention, the testimony of the two plaintiffs showed that the husband had attended to securing transportation; that he obtained passes for himself and wife, and that they had traveled on these passes before; that she knew the difference between passes (she called them "cards") and tickets, for on that day her husband had purchased a ticket for a friend who was traveling with them, and she had seen him use both ticket and passes. They further testified that she had not had either pass in her possession, and that her attention had not been called to the stipulation. Now, it is insisted that the exemption from liability for negligence results only from a contract therefor; that there can be no contract without knowledge of the terms thereof and assent thereto, and that she had neither knowledge of the stipulation nor assented to its terms; that therefore there was no contract between her and the company exempting it from liability for negligence. Counsel refer to several cases in which it has been held that stipulations in contracts for carriage of persons or things are not binding unless notice of those stipulations is brought home to such passenger or shipper. We do not propose in any manner to qualify or limit the decisions of this court in respect to those matters. They are not pertinent to this case. They apply when a contract for carriage and shipment is shown. When that appears it is fitting that any claim of limitation of the ordinary liabilities arising from such a contract should not be recognized unless both parties to the contract assent, and that assent is not to be presumed, but must be proved. Here there was no contract of carriage, and that fact was known to Mrs. Boering. She was simply given permission to ride in the coaches of the defendant. Accepting this privilege, she was bound to know the conditions thereof. She may not, through the intermediary of an agent, obtain a privilege—a mere license—and then plead that she did not know upon what conditions it was granted. A carrier is not bound, any more than any other owner of property who grants a privilege, to hunt the party to whom the privilege is given, and see that all the conditions attached to it are made known. The duty rests rather upon the one receiving the privilege to ascertain those conditions. In Quimby v. Boston & Maine Railroad, (150 Mass. 365,) a case of one traveling on a free pass, and in which the question of the assent of the holder of the pass was presented, the court said (p. 367):

"Having accepted the pass, he must have done so on the conditions fully expressed therein, whether he actually read them or not. (Squire v. New York Central Railroad, 98 Mass. 239; Hill v. Boston, Hoosac Tunnel & Western Railroad, 144 Mass. 284; Boston & Maine Railroad v. Chipman, 146 Mass. 107.)"

So in Muldoon v. Seattle Railway Company, (10 Wash. 311, 313):

"We think it may be fairly held that a person receiving a ticket for free transportation is bound to see and know all of the conditions printed thereon which the carrier sees fit to lawfully impose. This is an entirely different case from that where a carrier attempts to impose conditions upon a passenger for hire, which must, if unusual, be brought to his notice. In these cases of free passage, the carrier has a right to impose any conditions it sees fit as to time, trains, baggage, connections, and, as we have held, damages for negligence; and the recipient of such favors ought at least to take the trouble to look on both sides of the paper before he attempts to use them."

See also Griswold v. New York &c. Railroad Company, (53 Conn. 371;) Illinois Central Railroad Company v. Read, (37 Ill. 484, 510.) As was well observed by Circuit Judge Putnam in Duncan v. Maine Central Railroad Company, (113 Fed. Rep. 508, 514,) in words quoted with approval by the Court of Appeals in this case:

"The result we have reached conforms the law applicable to the present issue to that moral sense which justly holds those who accept gratuities and acts of hospitality to perform the conditions on which they are granted."

We see no error in the record, and the judgment of the Court of Appeals is Affirmed.
